Not see why others should make a fuss about it. Ever since the case was reported, the police and detective departments have been trying to discover some clue whereby the identity of the perpetrators could be discovered. While Chief of Police Donahue is not yet ready to take any decisive action, he has several suspects under surveillance and his investigations have been carried forward to a point where he is morally sure that he can lay his hands on one of the gang at any time he desires to do so.

leisurely southward on Thirty-seventh street. "All this time I was talking to them, trying to convince them that they had the wrong man, that my name wasn't Eddie McGee and that I had not stolen $500 from my aunt, but they paid no attention to me. When they declined to make any reply at all they merely grunted. It didn't occur to me to study their faces closely, a fact which I soon had occasion to regret, but it perhaps wouldn't have availed me much if I had, as their slouch hats were pulled down over their eyes, and their coat collars were turned up over their chins, and about all I could see was their noses. It was very dark, too, and the men kept their faces averted as much as possible.

my guardian in a whispered conversation. I couldn't catch a word of what they said. After each one of these interviews the man on the outside would go away, and after a moment or so I could hear the tinkle of a telephone bell which meant that my aunt, I believe they were in telephonic communication with some person or persons in Omaha all the time. "The man who kept watch over me was drinking heavily all the time. At first he didn't talk at all, but after he had been about four hours old, I should judge, he began to get garrulous. He talked about all sorts of things, and his talk rambled, though whether from drink or design I couldn't say. Finally he became bolder. Two or three times he touched upon the subject of my abduction, and I gathered from his remarks that there were six men in the gang of which he was a member. He said one thing which was very much to the point, and which startled me.

Men Who Took Him Alleged They Were Officers from Sarpy County.

Edward Cudahy, Jr., related yesterday to a reporter for The Bee the circumstances attending his abduction and his experiences while in the hands of the kidnapers. He appears well, though pale and somewhat emaciated as the result of his terrible ordeal. His wrists still bear the marks of the handcuffs placed upon him by his captors.

"I happened while I was on my way home from Captain Rustin's," said he. "It was about 8 o'clock. I should judge, and very dark. Just as I got in front of General Cowan's residence—352 South Thirty-seventh street—two doors from home, two men sprang in front of me and thrust pistols in my face. I don't know where they came from. I didn't see them until they stood within three feet of me and had me covered with their revolvers. One of them said:

"'Again I rode over rough, unpaved streets. I can't distinctly recall that we were not driving in a dirt, rutted course, for the buggy kept making turns, first in one direction and then in another. I could see that they were trying to confuse me in regard to the street we were on. We stopped; the chauffeur and I, the bandage was removed from my eyes, and I was told to 'git.'

MR. CUDAHY'S LONELY DRIVE

Had No Doubt That the Men Who Kidnaped His Son Would Keep Faith.

During an interview at his home last night, Mr. Edward Cudahy denied that there is any foundation for the statement in an afternoon paper that the chief of police knows the names of the men implicated in the abduction of his son and can place them under arrest the moment he is instructed to do so. "To my knowledge there is not a word of truth in it," said Mr. Cudahy. "The case will not be dropped. On the contrary, I have instructed the police to work persistently along the clues they may find from time to time, and we will not rest on them until we will have some of the most skillful detectives available after these men at once. In fact, the detectives are now at work.

"In this connection I want to say that I have absolute confidence in regard to Chief Donahue. He does not do anything possible to capture the men implicated in the crime, and in advising and employing the detectives under him he has given excellent satisfaction. Referring to the assertion that Mrs. Cudahy charged the police with being in collusion with the abductors I will only say that there are some features of journalism that ought to be discouraged and the one on which this assertion is based is one of them. Mrs. Cudahy believes nothing of the kind."

His Lonely Drive. Mr. Cudahy told an interesting story of his thrilling drive to the lonely woods on the Fremont road, where the kidnapers specified the bag of gold must be deposited for them. Chief Donahue advised Mr. Cudahy not to go on the errand. He believed it to be a further scheme of the abductors to carry out a holdup. But Mr. Cudahy drove on, and then he learned after "There was something about the tone of the letter which those men sent me," Mr. Cudahy said, "that precluded all idea of fear. I was confident the men meant business. I believed that if I carried out the errand without company, the kidnapers would bring me a holdup in addition to the kidnaping.

"The note from the kidnapers came in the morning. Arrangements were made at once with the Omaha National bank for the money. The entire sum, $25,000 in gold, came from that bank. It was brought to my house at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Following the instructions of the note I left the house at 7 o'clock. It was then just after dark. I was alone in a light wagon, and I had a good view of the road. I was a good traveler and as far as the roads were in good condition they went along at a pretty good gait. I don't think I had gone very far from the house, driving along Thirty-sixth street, when I heard a wheelman behind me. I turned into Center street and found the road was blocked. I observed that the bicyclist still followed, and then the idea occurred to me that he was some one detailed by the kidnapers to see that I carried out my part of the agreement in starting from the house. The man on the bicycle remained about the same distance behind for a couple of miles, I guess, and then he turned off from the main road and disappeared.

Found the Signal All Right. "All the time on the way out there I wasn't thinking of much but getting back the boy. It was pretty dark and some times when the road was rough and the wagon started perhaps a little more impatient, on that account. Of course I realized that a good deal depended on following carefully the instructions contained in the note, but there was never a minute when I doubted that I would find the signal stick and that the money would reach the men for whom it was intended.

I guess I had driven about five miles when I caught sight of the lantern. The spot was a lonely one in the midst of a dark woods. The note said that the signal stick was to be placed on the top of a hill. The lantern was right at the edge of the road; just a plain commonplace lantern such as a brakeman carries, and it was swung on a stick planted upright in the ground. There were some bushes in the way, and I saw the stick as it had been stated in the note there would be. I alighted from the wagon, took the bag of gold from the place under the seat and left it there close to the stick in plain view, as there was no grass, or at least none tall enough to hide the top of the stick. I didn't stay there a minute, but turned the team around at once and drove away.

Confident Outlaws Would Keep Faith. "There was only the bicycle and a solitary farmer driving a team in sight during the trip out to the lantern and back home. The rider, as I said before, I saw on the way out. The farmer was passed when he was about a mile from the house, always paying no attention to anyone, and for that reason I paid little attention to him. It would be hard to tell what I was thinking about during the drive back, any more than to say that my thoughts, naturally, were on my son's return.

Told to "Git." "The only way I had of reckoning time was by the sense of light and darkness. I knew when Wednesday night came, because it got very dark in the room. The night was about four hours old. I should judge, there came that light tap at the door with which I had become familiar. There was another whispered conversation and then my captor told me I was to be taken back home. I never experienced such a sense of joy in my life. The two men tightened the bandage over my eyes and unlocked my doors; then I was led down the crazy staircase again and placed upon the seat of the same vehicle in which I had ridden to the place. The chauffeur turned a sharp corner and drove leisurely away.

Put Irons on Him. "I could tell by the way the men's footsteps resounded throughout the house that it was vacant and stripped of furniture. I observed also that they struck no light. I would have been conscious of a sense of light had they made one, for the bandage could not have excluded all its rays. The men still moved about in absolute silence, exchanging no word. One of them found an old iron safe in the kitchen and pushed it down upon it. Then he removed the cords from around my wrists and substituted for them a pair of handcuffs with chains attached, and made the latter fast to the rungs of the chair. A pair of leg irons were clamped upon my ankles, and the chains of these were also locked about the legs of the chair.

Had Been Watching for Months. Edward Cudahy, Jr., was seen at his father's home last night. His spirits seemed to have been much improved by the rest he has had since his return. "There was one thing that the kidnapers said to me that I forgot to mention this morning," said he. "While I was up in that room, blindfolded and chained to a chair, one of them said: 'Do you remember the time six weeks ago that you and your mother went in a carriage out near Brownell hall to call on a family?' I said I did, and then he said: 'Well, we were going to see that man that night, but changed our minds because we were afraid your mother would raise too much of a rumpus.' 'He repeated several times that our house of the man of ordinary wealth who has just dropped a nickel down a cellar grating. While Mr. Cudahy was telling the story of his drive to the lonely woods, he entered the room and listened for a few minutes. Most of the time he was looking out of the drawing room windows into the darkness. He had the appearance of one who was bored by being kept within doors, but in his eyes he peered into the darkness there was a lack of eagerness to get outside that indicated he will have a wholesome dread of a dark night for a good many years to come.

ARRESTS LIKELY TO FOLLOW

Police Department Will Bend All Its Efforts Toward Apprehending the Criminals.

J. J. Donahue, chief of police, says that at least one of the men who kidnaped Edward Cudahy, Jr. last Tuesday night is known to him personally and that unless he misses his calculation one or more of them will be in custody within the next 48 hours. He hopes that the first arrest will lead to the apprehension of the others. He has four detectives working on the case, assisted by two Pinkerton operatives, who arrived Thursday from Chicago. These, he says, will leave no stone unturned until the kidnapers are behind the bars. They are instructed to give the case their undivided attention.

"Up until the time the boy was returned," said the chief, "the police department did nothing that was not in perfect compliance with the law. In spite of all the recent warlike talk in some papers it is gradually becoming apparent that many of the magnates prefer mutual concessions and a compromise rather than the experience of another expensive conflict. It is my belief that the American league of the White Stockings, President Donahue of the American league would stand firmly for its rights, but that he personally was of the opinion that it would be much better for both of the big leagues to make concessions in order to settle the matter without a fight. He said in part:

"I believe that some misquoted interviews have given the general public a wrong impression. It is a bad thing to have ball parks in any city and those idle stadiums are a menace to the American league for the next two seasons. We will not secure in our own city, and these cities were ready for invasion and to protect ourselves we will have to establish clubs in Baltimore and Washington. After this step was taken it was but natural—since we were in Philadelphia, but I at least have never seen a baseball game in Philadelphia since that organization forced a night on us. It is now certain we will enter these three cities with good will, and I think that I would like to see it done without any war. Neither side can expect to get all it wants, but I think it would be a little thing that would be avoided.

TROXLER'S REQUEST DENIED

Racing Judges at New Orleans Refuse to Reinstate Suspended Jockey.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 20.—Roscoe Troxler, who was ruled off the local track in 1928, applied to Judge R. Ross for reinstatement. The judge, however, refused to grant the request.
