For Its Countinuance and Strength the Union Requires That the Rural Classes Should Thrive and Prosper.

Following is an abstract of the address delivered by Chancellor Andrews of the University of Nebraska at the Nebraska

Dairymen's meeting at Lincoln: Two great movements are now progressing in the United States, which have extraordinary social importance. One is the rush of population into cities; the other, the syndicating of most wealth in a manner which threatens to lower the fortunes of the rural classes. These classes, being among these which cannot combine, have to sell their products competitively, whereas for most things which they buy they must pay syndicate prices. These two movements are so sweeping and in their effects so decisive that some thinkers regard them as destined to reduce the rural population of America to ignorant peasants such as we see and pity in most European lands. That result every true American would wish to avoid. It character and integrity of thenest average and also for the richest device people, common sense, sincerity, large ment of patriotism. These qualities springs and "Mether Earth." They are found in cit." of course, but usually because they are brought there. The strongest instances of them are not indigenous in towns. It is generally recognized that town life would soon grow pale and sickly, as well in moral as in physical regards, but for incessant importation of blood and character from the country. It is a matter of common knowledge that nearly all the men and women in the most commanding pesitions in society, business, literature and life were born and reared in the country. Over and above the preceding considerstions, which apply to other countries as well as our own, there is a special reason for conserving and strengthening rural interests here in the United States. Europe was settled mainly under military motives. so that all over Europe the great landowner is even today a more significant

Second-Perfect ronds. The advantages to incalculable. The time is coming when in all well-populated sections travel will be so swift and comfortable and the entire poping, gather at the center as easily as such a crowd can now form in any city, when county centers will have churches, music halls, opera houses, schools and all simi-lar agencies of culture as good as there are in the world. Third-Free rural delivery of mails will come immediately after roads are made good, so that newspapers and other intelligence by mail will not only speed across railways extend, but reach destination from postoffices with equal expedition. Fourth-Country high schools. Efforts for the establishment of these have been making for a number of years in this state. The need is a pressing one. Those interested in the cause are in earnest and may be counted upon to continue agitation until every boy and girl in the country parts of the state can obtain first-rate school preparation for the university or for life without tuition cost and without being obliged to leave home. Fifth-Vastly improved primary and grammar as well as high schools. When rapid and easy travel over country roads is the rule schools will be concentrated at county and township centers so that grading can be made much more complete than now. A higher order of teaching talent will also be employed. Far beyond this in importance—grading and administration being equally good—country schools can be made immensely more instructive and inspiring than city schools. Nature the central object of attention in modern chooling, city pupils can approach only with travel and expense, but it lies in all its departments open and ready for in-spection under the eyes of country pupils

Sixth-The encouragement of all who can to build and live in the country, even if a part of their life must be in the city. The this encouragement. A reflux of population from city to country will certainly occur whon country roads are perfect, mail facilities greatly bettered, schools, concerts, churches and other means of culture as good in the country as in the city, and so on. But aside from these considerations there ought to be a richer, deeper and more general appreciation of the country than now exists. The country is beautiful, healthful and everywise desirable on its own account. If people think otherwise or do not think on the subject at all it is due to their lack of culture. They ignore the works of God, as stupid people might walk through the Louvre and not think of the matchless art creations upon the right hand and the left. The subject, the glory of the country, ought to be taught, written up and preached upon until enthusiasm for country living becomes deep and general. Seventh-Farmers themselves can assist to strengthen and enrich country life by doing farm work in a more systematic manner than is now usual. Too much farming goes by mere routine and tradition without the slightest application of scientific pr'aciple. How few farmers, for instance, keep books so as to know what profit accrues from such and such an animal, herd, crop or parcel of land? This methodless and unintelligent farming is responsible for much of the disposition shown by your boys and girls to rush to the city. Young people with intelligence wish to cuitivate their minds and are determined to do this. The farming which they have known doesn't ply them with that motive. Farming might be so carried on that young people's mental faculties and sense of art would be addressed by it far more than
