McKinley's dispatch was the first to reach the prince's ears. His new life was just as Frederick the Great was the first European sovereign to recognize the independence of the United States, so now the president of the great republic has been the first to recognize the kingship of the great grandson of the monarch against whose authority the American colonists rebelled.

"This is touching, when one remembers the prince's visit to Washington's tomb. It may have been this act that caused President McKinley to hasten to salute the king."

TO GATHER AT QUEEN'S BIER

Royal Family Will Listen to Reading of Services for the Dead by Bishop of Winchester.

COWES, Isle of Wight, Jan. 21.—A. m.—At 11 o'clock this morning the members of the royal family will gather around the body of the late queen, which lies in a simple coffin in the Chapel of the Ardene, east of the town of Winchester. The coffin is draped with black and white, and is placed on a stand, removed for the occasion from the private chapel, will read a portion of the service for the dead.

The coffin rests on a specially erected platform, draped with royal purple, the feet lying to the right, the head facing the simple altar. For a few hours after the conclusion of this service the public will be admitted to the room and permitted to view the body. The body will rest there until Sunday and it is probable that no removal will occur for ten days.

Death Due to Senile Decay. The correspondent of the Associated Press learns that the cause of the queen's death, as officially given, was "senile decay." The doctors have adopted this expression as most suitable and truthful. They say that the general weakness of her condition, nor is it considered advisable, for reasons of state, to intimate that her intellect was affected.

The details of the dying hours were not obtainable until late in the evening. It appears that the queen was moved on Sunday from her bed into a small cot, especially built with springs, which was surrounded by a screen. This was to enable the doctors to reach the patient unobscured by the general weakness of her condition, which was not considered advisable, for reasons of state, to intimate that her intellect was affected.

Just Before the End Came. When Emperor William arrived he rushed in without taking off his overcoat to her bedside, and the first words he said were words of regret that his mother was unable to come. "Yes," murmured the queen, "it wish 'Vicky' could be here," using a pet name of her eldest daughter.

On Tuesday afternoon all the members of the family were in readiness for the end. At 4 o'clock the prince of Wales was summoned. Half an hour later he was joined by the other members of the family. At 5 o'clock the duchess of York arrived, and the queen kissed her: "I am glad you have come," she said.

The bishop of Winchester began to pray. The queen slowly sank into unconsciousness. At 6:15 p. m. the end was thought to have come. The prince of Wales and several others walked out of the room, but the vitality of the queen once more won the day. For another fifteen minutes, with only the prince of Wales and a few others present, the feeble spark of life was maintained. At 6:30 o'clock, with Emperor William, the prince and other absent, death actually came.

Death has softened the face and the thin veil conceals no terrible defects. The hand of the mighty leveler degrades the hand of the mighty ruler. The visitation of nature was mercifully mitigated, so also have been the pomp and glory which accompany the succession of the king. Tuesday night neither he nor his wife would allow their entourage to address them by their correct titles.

Detectives Guard Kaiser. A large force of detectives were present from London as a precaution against any anarchist attempt on the life of Emperor William and not on account of the new king.

Messages of condolence do not cease to come.

gates a tall gentleman in front of the crowd and he shouted: "Long live the king," whereupon the crowd cheered with redoubled vigor.

King Speaks Extemporaneously. The king, at the accession ceremony, wore a military uniform. His brief speech was delivered with great earnestness and was quite extemporaneous. It is expected it will be printed later in official form.

At the latest moment the king decided not to attend the House of Lords today. The proclamation of the accession of his majesty was signed by the princes present, the duke of York first, then the duke of Connaught, then the duke of Cambridge, Prince Christian, the archbishop of Canterbury, the lord chancellor, the lord mayor and the other representatives of the city of London.

At 4:30 p. m. the artillery began firing salutes in James park to signalize King Edward's accession to the throne. Among the incidents of the day was an imposing military procession. The lord mayor and aldermen, accompanied by the city marshal, mace bearer and other members of the corporation, escorted by a strong body of police, proceeded from the Mansion house by way of the Thames embankment to Trafalgar square, where they were met by gilded equipages with liveried waiters, including twenty semi-state carriages, making a notable picture, which was witnessed by thousands of silent people who filled the sidewalks along the entire route.

In December, 1900, the membership was 150,329, an increase of 98,312, or 108 per cent. There were organized and reported 698 locals, as against 477 in 1899."

President Mitchell said that the miners should own their own headquarters building, but suggests no city. On the arbitration problem the president said: "The advantage to miners for arbitration is where mutual contracts are entered into for a given period of time have become so obvious that I am convinced that even more satisfactory results would accrue to each if contracts were entered into which would insure uninterrupted employment for a period of two years instead of one. I would recommend that our organization propose to the operators the formation of a joint board of arbitration and conciliation, whose duty it shall be to adjust all disputes arising between operators and miners, and to provide for the interpretation of the provisions of the joint agreement, the services of such board to be called upon only where adjustments cannot be effected by the ordinary and established methods now in force."
