Uncontrollable Torrent of Passion. Balfour looked appalled at the result of his action, but nothing could now stem the torrent of passion on the Irish branches. The first sergcant-at-arms entered and called upon Eugene Crean of Southeast Cork to accompany him from the house. Crean, who is an excitable and determined man of fifty, wiry and muscular, answered. "I won't go unless you take me out. Then, at a signal from the sergeant, the door of the house opened and twenty policemen appeared.

It was a spectacle that struck with horror all who witnessed it.

The police advanced to Crean and surrounded him. He clung to the benches, and after a desperate struggle was lifted by ten constables and dragged from the cham-

"You will be carried out of South Africa the same way yourselves!" Then they began singing "God save Ire land," yelling defiance and provocation to members opposite, and the hous was converted into indescribable pande-montum. The next member removed was John Cullinan, a stalwart Tipperary man, who was even more difficult to handle than Crean. The policemen swarmed over the benches toward him, tramping other members on the way, and only by herculean efforts were able to drag him to the floor and so out across the members' lobby to the palace yard.

Defiance Hurled at Speaker.

The temper of the Irishmen now became more dangerous than ever. The speaker appealed to them to obey the orders of the house. They shouled back defiance and the ministers and their supporters looked on shamefaced at the unexampled scene being enacted, far worse than any that had ever taken place in the Austrian Reichsrath

At one moment a movement was made by some younger men to rush across the floor and throw themselves on the ministerialists, but it was checked by the older colleagues, who appealed to them to be satisfled with the protest they were making. The leaders were deeply concerned. Asquith tried to intervene in the interest of conciliation, but was shouted down by the ministerialists. P. O'Brien asked the speaker to use his influence to induce Balfour to agree to an adjournment of the debate, but this, too, was refused.

Again the cohort of policemen appeared. This time they were ordered to take Patrick MeHigh of South Leitrim, but they grabbed Patrick White of North Meath instead. White, though a snowy-haired man, gave a dozen heavy constables immense of four new war ships, the Montague, firsttrouble to remove him. Iriahmen encour-
