done away with the one-time menace health, and as a result the really elegant material is more freely used. As I stated in my opening sentence, grief knows no law and each individual determines for herself the length of time during which the first heavy black shall be worn, but for all the many who don out of respect or as a concession to others three months, or even six weeks suffice. The rule of the veil is also an elastic one. Many women wear it to the funeral ceremony only. Others continue its use for the first six weeks, but no longer time is prescribed by la mode. Those who desire its protection after that first period is passed belong to the real mourners whose grief entitles them to a free will and who exercise personal preference; but even these seldom wear it over the face after the first few weeks. To be are essential to health and the sooner the long, heavy encumbrance is discarded or thrown back the better from every point of view.

Style Softens the Blow.

Cut and style for these costumes of deepest mourning follows the general rule of the seasons. This spring we are all fairly revelling in shaped flounces, in tucks and fancy stitching, each and all of which appear upon the black gowns. Crepe is always handsome and is used with effect both as an entire circular flounce and a trimming of bands upon one of the material. An exceedingly satisfactory gown, recently complete, is of Henrietta, with the graduated flounce of the crepe and three milliner's folds above serving as a heading, while the bodice includes a tucked yoke of crepe outlined by circular frills and a slightly shaped lower portion. The tucks are exceedingly effective, being held by faucy stitches in silk and there is a general air laid in tiny tucks that give a voke effect. Severity Not Essential.

As I have already stated, cut and style are not distinctive. There was a time when it was held that mourning gowns should be plain to the point of severity, but that time belongs to the past. The tendency is toward reducing the sombreness of the period as well as toward shortening it. While it is doubtful if society will ever adopt the Swedenborgian idea of wearing was contronted with the proposition of entire white in place of black, the trend is in that direction. For real warm weather young women and children will wear thin white gowns with black ribbons for church as well as for the house, and for the spring will wear veiling, wool crepe and the like within doors. Black with white is almost the charter, it is asserted, legislates out gay, so brilliant can it be made, but while of office the four assessors elected last with black is quite another matter and November and it will devolve upon the while less melancholy in appearance than county commissioners to appoint one asheavy mourning, at once stamps its wearer sessor to do the work.
