Be Intercepted. WASHINGTON, April 10 .- Secretary Long oday received a call from Signor Marconi, the Italian inventor whose name is identified with wireless telegraphy. The call was of a social character and with no purpose

Secretary Long inquired of Signor Marcont how, during times of war, an enemy could be prevented from intercepting messages while in course of transmission by stationing an apparatus at some interme diate point. Signor Marconi explained that this would be impossible, as the transmission is accomplished by sound waves, and it is only by an understanding between the sender and receiver of a message as to what the waves shall represent that communication can be carried on.

Although the inventor talked in an interesting manner of the system, no intimation was made that he desired to enlist the navy in its use.
