Meanwhile several freeholders of the lo- rick, Walter and Gildersleeve, also of Lincality had come to the assistance of the senior Johnson and were helping him open the right of way for Saddle creek. Others entered the chicken house, which was standing three feet deep in water, and carried out such of the fowls as lacked the advantage of webbed feet. The water was getting deeper every minute until one of the met at the dam, who was something of a civil engineer, dug a ditch around the obstruction and thereby supplied a temporary out let.

Race is Terminated

The race in the kitchep came to an end by the rollingpin gravitating to the center of the whirlpool and remaining there, which was considered very unsportsmanlike, and all bets were declared off. A short time afterward the men at the dam finished their work; the stream began to move through its wonted channel, and the maelstrom in the kitchen disappeared through the floor with a sucking noise like the exhaust of a bathtub.
