No letters transferred to his department." were found showing the residence of relativer. In a pocket of her underskirt was bourne, formerly superintendent of the govin money;

The coroner discovered from a conversation with the clerk of the hotel that Mrs. Overmeyer was evidently not used to trav- transport service and won his favor. eling and the customs of hotel life were unfamiliar to her. 'This fact, together with the woman's age, suggested very plainly that death was accidental, due to her lack of knowledge of the use of gas. "It is probable," said the coroner, "that she turned on the gas early in the evening while it was yet light enough in the room for her to move about. Presumably she thought the gas would light itself. Finding that it did not, she neglected to turn it Because of her age she was entirely overcome and the escaping fumes prostrated her before she had time to retire.' A telegram was sent to the city marshal at Beaver Crossing notifying him of Mrs. Overmeyer's death, for the purpose of discovering the whereabouts of her relatives.
