d at this resort the program is made up of clean, wholesome acts, in not one of which there is anything that would offend the most prudent and in each is to be found abundant amusement.

Grace Von Studdiford, popular prima donna, who is remembered for her association with the Bostonians, occupied the headticularly fine in the upper register, that will undoubtedly some day win for her a place in the high regard of the grand opera night she sang four songs, all of a different character; a classic by Isadore Luckstone, entitled "Delight;" a ballad, "What Might Have Been," by Max Fealkenhaver; a lulular "Annie Laurie."

As a monologue artist the equal of Lew Sully has not been seen in Omaha this season. His humorous stories and jokes, as well as his laughable parodies, keep an audience in an uproar of merriment during his entire act.

Genaro and Bailey are the parcest work ing team of entertainers that have come this way in many a day, and deserved the numerous rounds of hearty applause accorded them by an appreciative audience. Their grotesque cakewalk dance is something decidedly new and meritorious.

Burton and Brooks are a pair of rapidfire conversationalists, strictly up-to-date and amusing to a high degree.

Fuller, Moller and Burke offer an act not altogether original, but none the less amusing. Their dancing is exceptionally praiseworthy
