(From & Staff Correspondent.) LINCOLN, June 8 .- (Special Telegram.) --By upanimous vote the stockholders of the Nebraska Exposition association tonight agreed to accept the state offer of $18,000 for the fair grounds northeast of the city. The amount caked originally by the assocciation was $27,362, and the state's original offer was $15,000. After several weeks of negotiating, the association added thirty acres to the land first under consideration, making 110 acres altogether, for which the State Board of Public Lands and Buildings made a compromise offer of $18,000.

Tonight W. D. Fitzgerald and C. H. Rudge gave a guaranty that the $4,362 difference between the association's price and the state's offer would be raised by private public subscription and paid to the stockholders in addition to the money paid by the state. The action of the stockholders tonight practically closes the deal. The

Frank Allen, two youths living in Manton, started about two months ago to "hobo" their way to the Pacific coast, and ten days ago the Allen boy returned to Manton alone. The latter told the people of that city that he boarded a westbound train in Lincoln with his friend on the night of May 28. They were unable to keep together and hence they boarded different cars. At the first stop Allen alighted and made an unsuccessful effort to find his that the boy had been killed along the road, Allen climbed a returning stock train and made his way back to Manton. "It is evident," write: Dr. Holmes to the Lincoln chief of police, "that the Allen boy is not telling the truth. As a relative I am anxious to know the circumstances." Chief Hoagland is of the opinion that

At a meeting of the Grand Army post tonight a stirring speech on the "The Battle of Gettysburg" was made by Hon. E. J.

Hon. E. J. Burkett's Speech.

Mr. Burkett said in part: In pursuance to orders I am here this evening to give to you some impressions that the battleground of Gettysburg made that the battleground of Gettysburg made upon me.

I am glad that I have had an opportunity to visit the field of Gettysburg; that mighty cauldron of the civil war—a human fleshpot, as it were in which, under the July sur went out the lives of 40,000 men, representing twenty-nine states of this union.

I have appreciated since that visit more of what it meant to be a soldier. I stood upon the spot where Reynolds fell, and from thence followed the course of the army through its three days of carnage and bloodshed, by the monuments to the dead along the way. I went in the night time, as our armies did forty years ago in their confused retreat, through the town for a moment's rest on Cemetery Ridge. I followed them across the wheat field and into the "Devil's Den." I sipped from the spring where the gray and the blue, at the end of the second days fighting, commingled together and bathed their wounds in sympathy which each had received at the hands of the other.

Where Sickles Gave a Leg.

Where Sickles Gave a Leg.

I saw where Sickles gave a leg for a position of advantage on the Emmetsburg road, and where Captain Bigelow sacrinced six out of saven sergeants, four out of six guns, three out of four commissioned officers and eighty out of eighty-eight horses to hold it. I scaled Little Round Top, as Warren did, where upon his own responsibility and usurped authority he saved from the grasp of the rebels only ten minutes before their coming, the key to the situation and thus the battle of Gettysburg. I followed the course of the undaunted and emipresent Hancock, as here and there and everywhere, from position to position, he wheeled his forces to save a critical moment, and thus the day to the union. I passed at the spot which history designates "the high water mark of the rebellion." The stone wall is there; the umbrella-shaped trees still stand, as when Picket aimed his storm of shot and shell and shrapped and men against them.

loyal and devoted men of the north, and courageous and determined rebels. They still tell us the story of Hancock and Bingham and Sickles. They remind us of the tragic death of Reynolds and Weed and Zook and Farnsworth and Cushing. They speak of Fundamental Cushing. They speak of Fundamental Cushing. They speak of the wounds of Futterfield, Barlow, Barnes. Floubleday, Graham and Warren. They enumerate the 2,000 dead, wounded and missing from northern ranks, as well as the 41,000 lost to Lee's army. They proclaim the endurance and determination of the American soldier. From the fighting and bandspikes and stones and first in the hand-to-hand encounter on Cemetery Hill, to the seven trips across the wheat-field, and the final repulse of Pickett's field, and the final repulse of Pickett's charge, the suffering was appulling and the endurance wonderful.

charge, the suffering was appulling and the endurance wonderful.

But, gentlemen, most of all those trees remind us of the hour when sounded the death knell of that great conspiracy against the republic, for at the moment when the Army of the Potomac was plucking the "Flower of the Confederacy" at Gettysburg Grant and Sherman and McPherson and many of you were cutting the roots at Vicksburg that left it a withering stem.

Beginning and the End.

Beginning and the End.

There were other great battles before and after these two, but Vicksburg and Gettyshurg together mark the beginning of the end, as we know it now. After Gettyshurg the last hope of foreign assistance abdicated the throne of reason. Lee had long cherished the fond belief that if a northern city of importance could be taken that Europe would recognize his southern confederacy. He realized that the world understood the meaning of his attempted raid to the north and fully as well did he understand the effect of his failure. Vicksburg, upon the other hand, dethroned hope and confidence within. It cut in twain the confederacy and left the heart exposed. From that moment the only evidence of life to the south was the involuntary responses to strong stimulants involuntary responses to strong stimulants artificially administered.

cere toright practically closes the deal. The deed to the land will be submitted to the state board Monday and immediately upon its approval a state warrant for the purchase price will be issued.

The property involved in the transaction is popularly known as the "old fair grounds." The state fair last year, and for many years before it removed to Omaha, was on this land. The State Board of Agriculture will meet next week to arrange for permanent improvements of the grounds.

SCOTTS BLUFF COUNTY AN EXAMPLE

Aides Are Announced for Grand Army -Trouble Over Penitentiary Bids -Receiver for Gothenburg Bank. (From a Staff Correspondent.) LINCOLN, June 8 .- (Special.) - "Irrigation has transformed a large portion of Scotts Bluff county from semi-arid plains land to valuable farm and garden land, wealth-producing and as fine for agricultural purposes as any land in the state. remarked Secretary Dobson of the State Board of Irrigation today. Mr. Dobson recently returned from a trip over the irrigated section of the county. He says the growing crops in the territory supplied by the ditches are thriving and, although there has been some trouble with grasshoppers, no serious damage is noticeable. Scotts Bluff county is at the extreme western end of the state. Under ordinary natural conditions its soil is similar to that of other counties in the sandhill country. The principal ditch in the section referred to by Mr. Dobson taps the Platte river a few miles beyond the western boundary line and extends in a southeasterly direction almost parallel with the river. Another ditch, now in course of construction, will connect the Mitchell ditch with Gering and when completed will be about thirty miles in length. "There is strong rivalry between the towns of Scotts Bluff and Gering," said Mr. Dobron. "One is on the railroad and and Chemical Characteristics of Wyoming the other isn't, but there is good prospect Petroleum. of an electric railway line to connect the two places within the near future.
