LONDON, July 13.-The society season which opened with all promise of mourning and duliness and which is gradually drawing to a close in a round of galety, was as appreciated as it was unexpected. With no court function, it could scarcely be expected to be brilliant, but there has been a lavishness of entertainment which has quite surpassed the same period of 1900 and which forms striking testimony to the change of regime. The members of the royal family and the society leaders are now slipping out of town. The majority have gone or are going to the continent. The theaters are closing up, but the hotels, thanks chiefly to the large number of American visitors, continue to be packed. One of the most interesting of the many functions which have marked the opening of the season was at Apsley house. For nearly half a century this enormous mansion, in which lived and died the great duke of Wellington, has remained closed, for the recent duke, through bad health, was unable to live in London.
