"Where we missed it was in failing to increase our orders to double the usual amount. We ordered only for the usual consumption and now find that many of the houses will be out of this canned fruit before the next crop can be harvested. Many of the packers have no more stock on hand and to run short now means to remain short until next season.

"Practically the same condition exists with tomatoes as with strawberries. From canners we receive word that they will put up but a fraction of the usual output be-cause the stock cannot be secured. The would be quickly offset then." manager of the canning factory at Nebraska City was in Omaha this week making atrangements to sell a line of goods not heretofore handled to any considerable extent by that house. At the usual time of the year he made arrangements for threepound cans for tomatoes, expecting to put up the same amount as he did last year. He now says that he will not can more than one-quarter of that amount and has decided to use the cans for preserving apples and cabbage. He secured contracts from several of the Omaha jobbing houses for canned apples and canned sauerkraut, which he expects to put upon the market. this year. At Blair the managers expect that their output of tomatoes will be about one-half of what it was last year, but we hope that it will be somewhat greater, as the season is not so far advanced there as to contribute. it is in the southern part of the state. The lowest price that we can see for canned tomatoes of this season's pack is $1.10 per case, with a probable advance to $1.30.

A statement issued by one of the principal canneries of Baltimore shows that at this time it has disposed of its entire stock of beans, both plain canned and cooked, and there are practically no string beans in the country, so it will be impossible to restore that line. When I first noticed the increased demand for canned goods on the part of the retail dealers this fall I attributed it to a desire on their part to purchase at present prices for future sales on account of a probable increase in the wholesale prices. Later I investigated the matter and found that generally the stocks in the hands of the retailers are exceptionally light and that the greater part of the goods which I thought was being stored away 's going to the consumer, who is substituting canned goods for the fresh, which cannot be secured at prices within the ability of the ordinary man."

WEATHER NOW JUST WEATHER

No Extremes to Cause an Anxious Public to Ring Mr. Weish's

Telephone.

Weather conditions in the west are of a kind which gives the forecasters much relief from the public which in times of either extreme heat or cold is anxious to know what is going to come next. Generally throughout the west the weather is fair and slightly warmer in the northwest, but without sufficient change to make its effect felt seriously in this part of the country. The storm which has been devastating southern Louisiana, Mississippi and Ala-bama has passed off to the northeast, diminishing in severity, so the Mississippi and Missouri valleys will feel no effect from It.
