The corps of physicians in attendance upon the wounded president today committed themselves without reservation danger and that only the possibility of complications threatened his life. They did not vidually and separately during the day. Each of thez, with the exception of Dr. Rixey, who did not leave the Milburn residence, placed himself squarely on record, not privately to the friends of the president, but publicly through the agency of the press, that the danger point had passed and that the president would survive the attempt upon his life.

"Of course, we will all feel easier when a week has passed," said Dr. McBurney, the
