even beyond the estimation of his friends.

It is a remarkable fact that Mr. McKin-It is a remarkable fact that Mr. McKin-ley built up his wide popularity mainly after be became president, while he was holding the most onerous and exacting office in all the world. At the time of his first nomination he was not by any means an idol even with his own party. How has he won the hold on popular regard which we see manifested all over the United States today?

States today?

I ascribe this result first of all to the perception that President McKinley was peculiarly honest and sincere in his convictions. Those who doubted this at first thinking the president a politician, a man of policy, looking out merely for his own interests and those of his party and changing opinion easily, have been forced to a different view. Some probably still think him unwise in one and another matter, but few, if any, longer charge him with selfishness or truckling. His naming of Robert Lee and Stonewall Jackson as among the "great Americans." his appointment of Fitzhugh Lee and Wheeler as union generals and his last noble speech at Buffalo the day before he was shot cannot possibly be construed as partisan in nature or in motive, as dictated by party chiefs or by a wish for party popularity. They were the deeds and words of a brave and a deeply sincere soul.

Ex-Congressman Strode's Speech. Ex-Congressman J. B. Strode spoke of the life of the late president, his death and his influence, as follows:

william McKinley possessed a kindly heart and a generous spirit. He rendered enormous public services which have resulted in untoid benefit not only to the poor man, but the people in all walks of life. In the language of Dr. Gunsalus of Chicago: "His purity and power are forces which have been exalted on the altar of martyrdom. The assassin supposed he could slay them from the high and heavenly place in which the citizens of the republic behold them. They will organize into a knilghtly personality and Willam McKinley will be tree slayer of anarchy in America. From this time forward whatever makes for anarchy must hide its treacherous face away from the light of him whom we love."

W. J. Brynn's Address.

It would be more than strange, it would be a reproach to our people if there were differences among us so radical that they could not be softened by the tragedy of death. It would indeed be a disgrace to our nation if the murder of a president concerned only the members of the dominant party. While no recent campaigns have aroused deeper feeling than those through which Mr. McKinley passed, yet in no contests did the minority more cheerfully acquiesce in the will of the majority as expressed at the polls.

The president's position made him a part of the life of all his countrymen and the circumstances which attended his taking off added indignation to grief, indignation that even one murderous heart colud be found in all the land and grief that the wicked purpose of that heart should have been consummated against one so gentle in spirit and so kind in word and accounted.

wicked purpose of that heart should have been consummated against one so gentle in spirit and so kind in word and deed.

This is neither the time nor the place for a discussion of remedies for anarchy. It can have no defenders in the United States. Government is a necessity and the delusion that society can exist without it is harmful even when no violence is advocated.

Two overflow meetings were held to accommodate the sorrowing hundreds who were of necessity turned from the auditorium. The First Presbyterian church, directly across the street, was soon filled to the limit and the First Congregational church, one block south, was thrown open, its room being also tested to the utmost. Hon. G. M. Lambertson was the first speaker at the Presbyterian church, leaving there to go direct to the Congregational church. Ex-Congressman Strode followed Mr. Lambertson. Mr. Bryan followed Mr. Strode. Rev. Mr. Hindman was extemporaneous chairman. The vast audience followed his lead in singing the late president's favorite hymn, "Nearer, My God, to
