Admissibility of Evidence is Disputed and Court Suddenly Adjourns Until Monday-Looking Up Colorado Law.

James Dovle, plaintiff in the Dovle-Burns mining suit, went on the witness stand Saturday shortly before noon, when Judge Macy adjourned court until Monday afternoon

The early adjournment was due to a dispute as to the admissibility of evidence which counsel for the plaintiff desired to introduce and to which the defense objected. The evidence in question related to Doyle's connection and transactions with Burns prior to the entering into of the partnership agreement, upon which Doyle relies as the basis of his suit. The court held that matters prior to the agreement were immaterial, but the attorneys for the plaintiff desired to submit the rulings of the Colorado courts on this question and inasmuch as the agreement was entered into in that state Judge Macy granted them permission, and this point will be argued on the convening of court Monday afternoon.

Doyle's testimony yesterday morning was devoted principally to his relations with The funeral of Hartzog E. He told how he had placed the utmost confidence in Burns and had looked up to him not only as he would toward an older

(From a Staff Correspondent.) DES MOINES, Oct. 5.-(Special.)-According to the decision of Judge Holmes of the district court today, cities have the right to cut noxious weeds on any citizen's property and tax the cost against him. providing he refuses to cut them himself. The decision sustains the validity of the weed ordinances of Des Moines and other cities and the statutes of the state. The court holds that where weeds are noxious and pronounced a nulsance the city has the right to cut them. In the case in question the contract was held to be invalid because it did not confine to noxious weeds.

Two years ago the city of Des Moines let a contract to James Fahey and Ed Davenport to cut weeds, the ordinance providing that the cost should be taxed against abutting property or in cases where weeds grew on vacant lots the cost should be taxed against he property.

Suit for injunction was brought by James T. Liddle and others to restrain the city from making assessments on the ground that the contract was illegal, mainly because the city has exceeded its authority in levying such assessments. The petitioners will now come into court individually and attempt to show that the weeds on each particular lot were not Toledo, Cincinnati, Buffalo and other cities. noxious and nuisances and thus try to forestall the assessing of cost. The contractors, Fahey and Davenport, after making some headway at weed cutting, ran short of money and assigned the contract to others, who advanced money and were in a measure the defendants with the city in the suit. The unprecedented activity in electric railroad building in central lowa this year is expected to reach its height Monday when a syndicate of Cleveland capitalists will go before the city council and ask that the question of granting a franchise for the construction of an electric line from Des Moines to Newton, and ultimately to Marshalltown, shall be submitted to popular vote. Another peculiar thing about the disappearance of Mies is the fact that he is considered a very important witness in the cases now pending against Mayor Kelly in the district court. Mies is quoted as saying trip was to show the eastern men the lowa that he raised a certain sum of money from the breweries to be given to Mayor Kelly in return for certain privileges to be granted by the administration. cannot of course be secured. In looking up the disappearance of Mies : representative of The Bee called upon Mrs. Mies at her home on South Twentieth street in Omaha last evening. Mrs. Mies admitted that she had not heard a word from her husband since ae left on September 6. She said that she went to the depot with him and that he boarded a Northwestern train, saying that he was going west via Sioux City. As Mrs. Mies knows nothing about trains she did not suspect that her husban! was not going west as he had asserted.

Here is what Mrs. Mies says: "When I went to the depot with Mr. Mies he parted with me in the best of spirits, although his health has not been good for some time. After he had been gone two weeks and I had not heard from him I became worried and then stories came to me about his having gone to Europe. After I had tried to find out something from his relatives about his whereabouts and failed I called at the banks where he kept his money and I found that he had drawn every cent he had on deposit. From what I am able to learn Mr. Mies has not been in Denver since he left me at the depot on September 6.
