MILLIONAIRE MINER'S STORY

James F. Burns Goes on Witness Stand Against James Doyle.

Tells a Detailed Story of His Rise from a Poor Machinist to a Wealthy King of Cripple Creek District.

James F. Burns, multo-millionaire and president of the Portland Gold Mining company of Colorado, went on the witness stand vesterday afternoon in his defense in the suit brought against him by James penalty at death. Doyle. His answers under the examination of former Governor Thomas were decisive and rapid. He proved to be a calendar on dates. His testimony had reached only the early stage of his connection with Doyle in their mining transactions when court adjourned for the day. It is expected he will be on the stand for the rest of the Beginning the story of his relations with Doyle Burns said he had never met him in Portland, Me., his native place, but he had heard of him from members of his family. He never met Doyle, he said, until after he went to Colorado Springs. The now millionaire mine owner said he was a machinist and in his early days worked in the White mountains, later going to Louisians, where he worked at his trade and as a sugar botler. From there he went to Cuba in the sugar business and staved there until visits to his home in Portland, but never met Doyle. In 1887 he went to Colorado Springs, where his brother Thomas had preceded him two years. There he worked at his trade as machinist and steamfitter. From Colorado Springs he went to New York to meet his two sisters, and with them returned to Colorado. The sisters opened a dressmaking business.

Early Days in Cripple Creek. He and a man named Stephenson first planned the trip to the Cripple Creek district to prospect and they had bought part | aged negro. of their outfit when John D. Doyle Has Other Claims.

On January 21, 1892, Burns and O'Driscoll relocated the Devil's Own claim, as the sixty days in which to sink the discovery shaft had expired. Doyle assisted in running out the lines and while so doing Doyle discovered the Portland fraction and on which he trimmed with an ax and wrote Neill everything there was upon it, except the by Doyle Burns asked Doyle why he might help him in improving the claim. From January 22 to February 1 Doyle way to his home in Mankato, Kan., was and Burns worked on the shaft of Bobtail released last evening, Boyer having failed No. 3. On February 1 O'Haire, in comto appear at the time set for the hearing pany with a man named Brusoe, went to the in police court. Boyer was on hand in the camp and ordered that the surveys of their morning at police court, but Hamilton asked claims be made. While the surveys were for a postponement, saying he was not being made by Stevens, Burns and Doyle robbed the Kronstadt (S. D.) postoffice refor trial. Both their names were placed in the location certificates of both

The Mount Rosa Placer company located a claim covering the Professor Grubbs and Doyle and the witness were each given an interest in this company in consideration of their not filing adverse claims.

Doyle then located the Casco claim his own name and the witness assisted him in sinking the shaft twelve feet, this testimony being to show that Burns and Doyle exchanged work on their respective claims. At this point in the direct examination of the witness court adjourned for the day.

Other Witnesses Testify. Frank M. Currie of Victor, a mining engineer, was the first witness placed on the stand. He testified that in 1894, as notary public, he witnessed the affidavit county, municipal, school and other public in which Doyle and Harnan disclaimed interest in the Tidal Wave. This was an affidavit to non-abandonment of the Tidal Wave, sent to the land department in Washington, a certified copy of which was offered to evidence by the defense.
