the regular meeting of the city council last night, and the mooted question of the tax lovy ordinance did not come up. Sev. lative entry and promote land speculation eral aldermen expressed the opidion in private, however, that there is nothing for council to do but wait until the state supreme court acts on the application for s writ of mandamus, requiring it to sit again as a board of equalization and hear complaints of the members of the Real Estate exchange. Such action, it is supposed, will be taken February 18. Until then, at least, the levy ordinance must wait.

A spirited discussion ensued between Mount and Zimman on the subject of street lighting. Attorney Charles S. Elgutter had written a note to the council asking that a time and place be fixed for the submittipg of scaled hids for street lighting. This had been referred to the street lighting committee at a previous meeting and the members reported that it be placed on file, as a case involving the point at issue was pending in the district court. He closed by accusing Mount of having a personal interest in the matter. Mount sprang to his feet, rushed in front of the speaker and shook his fist in his face. For a moment it looked as though blows would be struck, but Zimman remained calm and trouble was averted.

The report of the committee was afterwards approved by a vote of five to one. Market Ordinance Passed.

An ordinance establishing the new market teenth and Fourteenth streets, and providing for the appointment of three men to act as a board of appraisers to assess damages in the condemnation of property on the proposed site was passed,

These ordinances were introduced: Providing for the grading of Thirty-third street from Burt street to Chicago street; pro-Sixteenth street to Twenty-second street; | providing for the opening of a street along Saddle creek from Hamilton to Leavenworth streets.

A resolution from the Central Labor granting the Thomson-Houston Electric Light company a new contract for street lighting was read and referred to the committee on street lighting. The resolution alleged that the system of "inside wiring" SALE OF PURE BRED STOCK various businesses. in use by the company was unsafe, also that the company was notoriously un-

George H. Maxwell Tells Why Present Compromise Measure Should Be Opposed.

He then goes to Joliet. the National Irrigation association, spoke of the subject of irrigation legislation pending in congress, saying that the so-called compromise bill should be defeated. He said the time had come when the interests throughout the country that wanted actual settlement must assert themselves and put Only routine matters were disposed of at an end to the persistent efforts being made at Washington to shape irrigation legislation so as to leave the land open to specu-instead of homestead settlement. The general irrigation bill, proposed by the committee of western members, he announced as fatally defective for three rea-

First—It makes no provision for reserving the land for actual settlers only under the homestead act, until after the contract for the canal has been actually let, and in the meantime, long before the letting of the contract the land to be irrigated would all be filed on by speculators under scrip and desert land entries and no real settlement or development would result.

Second—One of the greatest objections te government irrigation works from the east has been the fear that large tracts of land in private ownership would get the water instead of a large number of small settlers. This bill contains no proper sefeguards against this. It is true it says no one land owner shall get a water right for more than 160 acres, but experience has shown how easily this provision gould be evaded, and the water right absorbed into large holdups through dummy or nominal subdivisors and subsequent reserve acres to the original owner after the water right had been secured.

Stirk Mount a Bit.

"The question of whether or not Omaha shall favite competitive bids for street lighting is not pending in the district court," said he. "There's no reason why this matter should not be acted on now and there's every reason why it shouldn't be buried by being placed on file. If we don't let the outside world know we want competitive bids, how do we expect to get such bids?"

He closed by accusing Mount of baying a limit before a live of the committee of the water at any time, even though lands had been at easy reclaimed with it in the lower state. in the lower state

These defects, Mr. Maxwell said, were not the only objections which were being raised to the bill. There are influential members of the house of representatives who strongly oppose any general measure which takes the whole control of the subject of building irrigation works away from congress and vests it in the secretary of the interior. Other congressman object because they think the time is not ripe for general legislation. Today is Ash Wednesday, distinguished as the opening day of the Lenten season. While the observance of Lent as a formal period in the religious calendar is more particularly practiced by Catholics and Episcopalians, the season is made the ocension of special religious exercises among Protestants, generally, although these ex-ercises are not required by the laws governing the various Protestant denomina-

Contributes to Health.

Fasting, in a greater or less degree, is now generally regarded as contributing greatly to individual health, and this, with the lightening of the burdens upon physical energies due to the general suspension of social functions, has resulted in a much wider practice of some of the customs of the season, than distinguished the earlier observance of Lent.

A distinct increase in church attendance is always observable during Lent, this arising partly from the religious enthusiasm inspired by the periodic call to spiritual duty and partly from the fact that the exercises in the churches are more distinctly responsive to the awakened sense of spiritual responsibility. Then, too, the musical exercises are usually made especially at-

In all the Catholic churches, beginning today, there will be nightly services. At the Cathedral each Wednesday the services will be the rosary, the benediction and a sermon. On Fridays the resary will be said, and, also, the stations of the cross. The purely secular effects of the season's observances will be marked by a falling off in the attendance at places of

True, there are not a great number of them-one in front of the city hall and vert itself into sufficient lee to build a held for today's sale and prices may reach eight at various street corners—but they are such a big improvement over the old George E. > Benson asked for an extension to its environs of the electric light system of Omahi and offered to pay Omaha rents for use of the arc lights in the streets, but the Thomson-Houston company leveled its eyes straight at the Bensonian strong box and named $750 as the price for extending the feed wire from Clifton Hill to the viilage. Benson wiped up its old gasoline lamps and said no. That was about a year ago. Then John D. Creighton, who happens to be a relative of Mr. Nash, bought thirty acres of the old Jensen place to make a park of it and decided he wanted electric light in there. The park, is beyond Benson, but it got the light. And as the wire was strung through Benson, Benson was very cordially invited to tap it at a reasonable stipend per tap and has done so.

Encouraged by this experience, the town recently started in to get water by other rangement. The people importuned water company to extend its mains from the Country club to Benson after it shall have made good on its present announced determination of laying to the club. water company has replied that to give Benson any pressure at all it would be necessary to lay a 13-inch instead of an 8-inch main to the club and then an 8inch main on to Benson. Another subcommittee devoted its time to an examination of the site and a conelderation of its adaptability, from topography and surroundings, for the purposes of a public auditorium. Still another subcommittee entered into an investigation of the financial proposition, learning the se-crets and the experience of the Omaha men who have hustled up a fund of nearly $200,-000. It is whispered that the Omaha men gave their St. Paul brothers a tip not to go against the brick game.

C. P. Stine, secretary of the St. Paul Commercial club, said: "Our plan of operation has not yet been decided upon. We have just taken up the auditorium project and we thought it best to visit Kansas City and Omaha and secure some reliable data before laying out our work. The destruction of the big People's church by fire has left St. Paul without a hall adequate for conventions and unusual entertainments, and it was this confingra-tion that brought to life an auditorium dream that has been with us for some months. We examined the Kansas City Auditorium with great care and are in position to say that in many minor details the Omaha building will be its superior. We are particularly struck with the manner in which the Omaha architect has avoided waste of ground and interior obstructions." At 12 o'clock the meeting of the Omaha Auditorium company and the visitors was called together in the pariors of the club room. President Sanborn briefly stated the methods adopted in raising funds and the result of the work. J. W. L. Corning responded and then asked questions, the principal ones being in regard to the amounts contributed by the public service corpora tions and the railroads, the feeling of the labor unions toward the enterprise, the part taken by the women of the city in the work and the feeling of the community generally. The executive committee of the Commercial club then came in and all went to luncheon, after which brief talks were made by J. Frank Carpenter, president of the club, D. A. Baum, chairman of the executive committee, and others.

During his absence from home he frequently wrote to his family and girl friends. One of these friends showed one of his letters to Lydia Vint. The latter wrote to Timmone and a correspondence sprung up between the two. When Timmons returned to the United States he met the girl in Kansas City and the two were married.

"But you say you can do nothing without capital. I don't need to argue that question, for the men who are the rich men of yesterday were the poor boys of a few years ago. If you think that the rich men are dishonest just look over this city. Your rich mea are the best citizens. I know of no class so misrepresented as the millionaires. We believe these stories. It is human nature to criticise those who succeed "You do not need capital; you need comnon sense, not copper cents. You must find out what the people want and supply 1.200 it. The greatest need of Omaha is large manufacturing plants. One of the strangest things to my mind is why Omaha should have laid back and let men from Chicago 1 build the big plants at South Omaha. You could have done it. There is more good to be done in this city by building factories than in any other way. There never was a time when workingmen had a better chance than today. The greatest trouble is that they do not know what to make. Capital will come rapidly—as the wings of the wind—if you know what to make."
