Believed to Be Insane.

The commissioners on insanity will investigate the case of T. K. Taub, a Russian, today. Taub was arrested by the police Thursday night on account of his strange behavior. He at first gave the name of Martin and later that of Ike Jacobs. He claimed to be working in one of the railroad grading camps. Judge Scott, suspecting that his behavior was due to excessive use of intoxicants, gave him a bread and water sentence, but suspended it on condition that he left town, and he was released from the city jail. An hour later the powere called to Seventh street and Broadway, where Taub was found flourishing a razor and threatening to kill passersby. He chased one woman, who succeeded in escaping into a store. Taub wielded the razor such a threatening manner that no one dared attempt to take it from him until the belice arrived on the scene. When taken back to the city jail Taub excitedly declared that he would not leave town. He declared he was tired of being ordered to move on and said that no matter where he went he could not get employment and the authorities would order him on to the next town. His manner indicated that he was mentally unbalanced.

Shorten Line of March.

Out of regard to the old soldiers the line of march this year was shortened, the parade moving north on Main street to Washington avenue, thence to Oakland avenue and thence to the cemetery.

The exercises were held on a beautiful slope in the cemetery about half way between the junction of the two roads and the coldiers' burying ground. Here a platform had been built, which was draped and canopied with the national colors.

Following a selection by the band Dr. D. C. Franklin, presiding elder of the Methodist church, delivered the opening prayer. This was followed by a selection by a quartet consisting of Mrs. L. P. Hypes, Miss May Van Brunt, C. B. Aitchison and Dr. Claude Lewis. Rev. G. W. Crofts of Beatrice, Neb., a former pastor of the Congregational church of Council Bluffs, then recited an original poem which he had written for the occasion. Following another selection by the quartet the oration of the day was delivered by Hon. W. Scott Lewis of Glenwood. Judge Lewis said in part: Judge Lewis' Address.

The immortal Lincoln, while standing upon one of the great battlefields of the late civil war, said: "The world will little note or long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here." Those were the words of the commander-in-chief of the greatest and most powerful army that was ever organized among men.

mander-in-chief of the greatest and most powerful army that was ever organized among men.

How fitting and proper it is for the American people at this time in each recurring year, when all nature is at its best, to assemble together to do honor to the memory of the dead solders and by kind and loving hands strew their graves with lovely and precious flowers, and to once more recall briefly some of the stirring scenes that were being enacted throughout this country from 1861 to 1885.

After a while you saw the enemy completely surrounded and an unconditional surrender took place at Appomattox. You have seen and heard an appeal answered by the loyal and patriotic people of this iand which you preserved, and when the call came on the part of the lamented president in the year 1888 for 20,000 of the young men of this nation to carry the flag of this country into a foreign land, you saw 1,200,000 offered, each anxious and willing to go and determined to follow the old flag, in order that those poor suffering and starving people might be released from the great wrong they were unjustly suffering.

You have seen the son of the boy who wore the blue standing side by side with the son of the boy who wore the blue standing side by side with the son of the boy who wore the presents shall be maintained and upheld at whatever cost.

The people of this country are now united as they never were before. All sectional strife and sectional feeling has disappeared, and disappeared forever, and as the years come and go the cause for which you stood for and for which so many of your comrades died for will continually grow in the minds and hearts of your countrymen.

Let us cover the graves of these fallen heroes over with heautiful fowers. Let us here the sum of the proper sum of the people of the proper sum of these sales here so over the graves of these fallen heroes over with heautiful fowers.

DISHONEST POSTAL CLERKS.

An Inspector Says They Are Sure to Be Detected.

Be Detected.

"It is because one man thinks himself a trifle smarter than another that makes his thoughts run into dishonest channels," said an old postoffice inspector in the Washington Star. "I can account for the frequent arrest in all parts of the country of employes of the postal service, especially clerks in postoffices and letter carriers, only upon this hypothesis, and that there is an inherent streak in his composition of dishonesty, because he knows better than the public that once we get after postal thieves we never stop until we land them in jail. And still they go on all over the land pilifering from letters, believing themselves safe. It must jar some of them when they tumble into the trap we set.

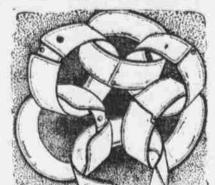

"It is a matter of corresponding interest to remember that, as these dishonest clerks well know, the trap which places the manacles around their wrists is the same old trap, like the same old bear trap, reliable and certain to hold fast once it is sprung, only it catches their piliering hand instead of their feet. It is the decoy letter which the postal thief quickly and slyly picks up and secretes about his person or elsewhere, and once it is in his hand the trap is sprung, the hand of the inspector on the case closes about his wrist and he waks to the station house to ruminate how easily he was caught once is not long before we have him in jail. Sometimes two dishonest employes will work together, but as a rule postal thieves are like the lone highwayman and prefer to go it alone.

"You see, the dishonest employe foolishly believes that he can beat the game, and an arrest in a large office has only a temporary deterrent effect upon the other secret thieves therein. They are more cautious and may perhaps lie low for a brief time, but not for long. It is a singular but true official fact that once a man begins to steal money letters he seldom voluntarily stops, and we have had men confess that they had been at this perarious business for years and would have remained at it as long as they were in the service but for their arrest. It is an easy way to make money for the time being to the clerk or carrier whose salary does not meet his expenses. He becomes emboldened by the confidence in his cleverness to secrete the money letters, forgetful that with each report of their nesses of the with each report of theft the efforts of the inspectors are redoubled to entrap him, and the closer are drawn the meshes of the net slowly but surely being entwined around him. Very often the guilty man is positively known to the inspectors for months before they can catch him redhanded, the thief in the meantime believing himself undetected."

IN A DRESS SUIT CASE.

Carpenters Who Carry Their Tools

About in Style. Without being in the least bit ashamed of his trade, whatever it may be, the modern mechanic when he has occasion to go about the city to and from a job carrying over. I don't remember thinking how a kit of tools, is very likely to carry it in a manner less conspicuous than formerly, reports the New York Sun. His sition." garb also, unless he is engaged in some trade that leaves its mark on one's clothes, is just like that of the majority of the men he meets. So there was met the other day, going back to the shop, apparently from some job that he had been at work on somewhere, a carpenter, who might have been thought to be somebody going traveling, if it had not been for the end of a saw sticking out of one end of his dress suit

A million years ago, more or less, when a carpenter went anywhere in the city, he carried his tools in an open box, having a bandle at the top of a lengthwise middle partition in it, this box being much like an exaggerated knife tray. One end of the long rip saw that is an inevitable part of the carpenter's kit projected beyond the end of the box, resting in a slit cut there to receive it. But this up-to-date carpenter had everything packed in a narrow and more convenient compass, in a dress suit case, and not only out of the way, but out of sight, all but about a foot of the rip saw, which projected from one end of the case, through a slit made for it. It did seem at first a little odd, no doubt, to see a man carrying a suit case with a saw sticking out of one end, but there is no manner of doubt all the same that this is the very latest and most strictly up-to-date method of carrying a kit of carpenter's tools.

Dubuque Times: The annual report of the state geologist shows that Dubuque's lead and zinc production has dwindled to insignificant proportions, 116,500 being the value reported for 1301. The low price of ore is the cause assigned. If the mines of this district have a future it is a future that will be developed by prospecting with diamond drills. Geologists and old miners suspect the presence of large bodies of ore at greater depths than have yet been reached in the exploration of this region.

Sioux City Journal: Fred A. Bennett of Sioux City, for about eight years state bank examiner, whose name has been much in debate for the republican nomination for state auditor, has announced his determination not to be a candidate. Those who know Mr. Bennett, and he has a wide acquaintance in the state, know what a splendid officer in the place in question he would have made, and his determination, not to be changed as the Journal understands, will be much regretted, particularly by those whose business relations with him have been most intimate. With the expiration of his present term, Mr. Bennett will not longer be bank examiner, and he will give all his attention to his personal business.

of this country into a foreign land, you saw 1,200,000 offered, each anxious and willing to go and determined to follow the old flag, in order that those poor suffering and starving people might be released from the great wrong they were unjustly suffering. You have seen the son of the boy who wore the blue standing side by side with the son of the boy who wore the gray, each vying with the other that the flag and what it represents shall be maintained and upheld at whatever cost.

The people of this country are now united as they never were before. All sectional strife and sectional feeling has disappeared, and disappeared forever, and as they sever were before which you stood for and for which so many of your comrades died for will continually grow in the minds and hearts of your countrymen.

Let us cover the graves of these fallen heroes over with beautiful flowers. Let us ever keep fresh in our memories the principles for which they so successfully maintained.

finished by some time in July and then it will be for rent to a first-class hotelkeeper. Some few weeks ago an epidemic broke out in Scranton and surrounding country which some of the physicians pronounced scarlet fever and others said it was the roseols, or German measies. As soon as it was learned that the disease was scarlet fever precautions were taken by the local authorities to prevent a further spread of the disease, and a strict quarantine was established. As usual in small piaces this caused much talk and some could not see why it was that they would qharantine one family and not another for what appeared to be the same disease.
