COUNCIL BLUFFS.

SEVEN PRISONERS ESCAPE

Overpower Jailer Martin and Wife Just After the Supper Hour.

POTTAWATTAMIE COUNTY JAIL EXODUS

William Thompson, Charged with Burglary, Evidently the Leader of the Gang—Others Make No Effort to Leave.

Seven prisoners made their escape from the county jail last evening after overpowering Jailer Martin and his wife, whom they forced into the corridor around the revolving cage and shutting the door on them a dash for liberty through the front door into the court house yard.

The prisoners who escaped were William Thompson and E. G. Jones, charged with breaking into Maloney's cigar factory; John Enrich, charged with breaking into Scott's drug store; Andrew Thompson, charged with breaking into Currie's livery stable; Underwood, H. Flaburn, charged with the larceny of a bicycle, and Mike Fahy and Mike Sheehan, charged with assaulting and robbing Fred Goth in the railroad yards.

All seven were awaiting trial, indictments against them having been returned by the grand jury Wednesday.

The men made their escape a little before 7 o'clock, a few minutes after they had finished eating supper. How they succeeded in picking the lock, one of the tumbler patterns, on the gate of the inner corridor, is not known.

There were eleven prisoners in the corridor which encircles the revolving cage in which the men are confined at night. During the daytime they are kept in the corridor.

Entrance to the corridor from the hallway of the jail is through a heavy door which has been locked with a tumbler padlock, but the outer door was unlocked.

Surprise the Jailor.

Jailer Martin had just finished his supper and was placing away some bread in the bread box which stands in the hallway against the wall next the outer door of the jail proper.

While he was stooping over the bread box the door was thrown open, striking the man on the head and almost knocking him down. Before he had time to recover himself Andrew Thompson rushed out, followed by the other six prisoners.

Thompson, who appeared to be the ringleader, seized Martin by the throat and attempted to force him back toward the cell door. Martin struggled and nearly succeeded in freeing himself when the other six men jumped on him and they forced him round the stairs and back to the cell door, through which they thrust him.

Martin called to his wife to get him his revolver, which was in the bed room off the hall. Before Mrs. Martin could do so, however, two of the fellows seized her and forced her after her husband through the door into the inner corridor. They then shut the door and turned on him his revolver, which was in the bed room off the hall.

One of the men ran into the bed room, seized the revolver, which was lying on the bed, and all seven then made a dash through the outer door into the court house yard.

Three turned down the alley into Sixth street, while the other four ran south on Main street, evidently intending to reach the railroad yards.

Jailer Martin succeeded in opening the door in a few seconds and started in pursuit, but remembering that the prisoners left behind were not locked in returned to the jail. The other four men who were confined in the corridor, James Cassidy, Harry Caley, John Plumb and Charles Coleman, made no attempt to escape.

Search for the Escaped Prisoners.

Search for the escaped prisoners was made at once. Sheriff Cousins and his force of deputies were soon on the scene.

Andrew Thompson, who is a big, muscular man, appeared to be the ringleader. He was Judge of the kangaroo court and was acting as "monitor" in which capacity he served out the meals to the prisoners.

It was learned that the men had been planned to escape from what was learned from the prisoners who did not attempt to escape. They claim they were not in the secret and did not know anything about the plan.

Plumb, one of the men who remained, was indicted with Sheehan and Fahy for robbing old man Goth. He insists that his partners told him nothing about their plan to escape.
