Mr. Pratt's Oration.

Nelson C. Pratt was the first orator presented by Master of Ceremonies Allen. Mr. Pratt, himself an enthusiastic Modern Woodman, spoke of the order. Though brief, his address was eloquent and evoked cordial applause.

To Mr. Pratt the greatest source of pride and admiration of the Woodmen is that it is an order which stands primarily for the protection of the homes of America. the comfort and safety of widows and orphans. of dross. "In seeking to honor the memory those of our order who have gone on before, what better tribute could be paid," asked the speaker, "than to talk of the order which they loved ""

This was an order whose members were drafted from the ranks, not of the aristoeracy of the nation, nor of the lower strats, but from the commoners; from the plain people; from the same ranks whence came Lincoln, Garfield and McKinley; from the ranks whence came that army of patripts that in the hour of dark despair snatched their country from peril and lifted a race from thralldom. Such an army, 760,000 strong marching shoulder to shoul der, was the Modern Woodmen of America. Unlike the phalanx of Caesar, going forth to conquest, this great legion of home protectors was marching on to better humanity and bind closer the ties of fraternal kinship.
