CROPS IN JIM RIVER VALLEY

Small Grain Maturing Rapidly and Corn Making Splendid Growth, Though a Little Backward.

HURON, S. D., July 22.—(Special.)—"Magnificent" is what an Illinois man said this morning of the growing of crops in this part of South Dakota. With a party of five he had traveled over the country with a team for a radius of over seventy-five to 120 miles, with Huron a few miles to the southeast of the center. These men are being sent and took special pains to investigate crop conditions and the verdict of the company is as above expressed.

A week of favorable weather, with copious showers the latter part of the week over most of the Jim river valley, has tended to push the small grain crop toward maturity. Barley and rye—the earlier sown—will be ready for harvest the present week, and that work will be pushed as rapidly as possible in order to get these crops gathered before the wheat is ready for the sickle. A little rye has been cut and the quality, like that of barley, is exceptionally good.

The wheat heads are also very heavy and unusually uniform in size and so full that the kernels cover each other for room. Oats are of the best and the acreage is larger than heretofore. The crop gives fine promise and is almost matured. Some report that it is ripening unevenly and that it will be necessary to cut it in two stages, but this, however, is not the general condition of the crop.

Corn is making rapid growth, and while a little backward because of cool weather, it gives promise of early maturity. Many fields are weedy because of continued wet weather, but the outlook is encouraging. Flax, millet and potatoes are as fine as could be desired. The potato crop will be large, as frost was less harmful than at first supposed.

HER NIGHT RIDE OF NO AVAIL. Woman Makes Gallant Effort to File on Land, but Male Opponent Secures the Title.

RAPID CITY, S. D., July 22.—(Special.)—At the Rapid City land office Saturday of last week occurred a "simultaneous home-stead entry," that is, two applicants filed on the same piece of land at the same time.

When the doors of the United States land office opened for business on that day there were two people standing at the threshold waiting for admission, a man and a woman. The man stepped up to the desk and said that he wanted to make his home-stead filing on a certain piece of land about seventy-five miles east of Rapid City, giving the description of the claim. As soon as the woman could be heard she stated that she wished to file on the same piece of ground.

His filing and purposes both entered had been made simultaneously, and under a ruling of the land office in Washington, in such a case the land is put up at auction, only the persons making the filing being allowed to bid, and it goes to the highest bidder. In this instance the man won, he paying a premium of $60 for the land.

Each had made a night ride on horseback to file on the land, and had ridden side by side for the greater part of the distance. It seemed hard for the woman to lose the land after she had made such a gallant effort to secure it, and the sympathy of the officials and the spectators to the contest in the land office were with her.
