ROCKFORD, Mass., Aug. 22.—Commander Pillsbury and his fleet of three auxiliary cruisers are still at sea. Unless the commander of the white squadron makes an effort to reach a harbor within sixty hours...

It is only fair to say that naval experts believe that Admiral Higginson's defense is good. Everything today certainly favored an attack by the enemy, but so acute of the blue squadron reported signs of Commander Pillsbury's fleet.

ROCKFORD, Mass., Aug. 22.—The contrast in the conditions prevailing off shore this morning and those of yesterday were most marked and those participating or watching the war maneuvers of the navy early today found things favorable to the fleet under Commander John E. Pillsbury.

When the sun came up today the atmosphere was as clear as it could be and extended observations were made from all signal and lookout stations.

It was not long after sunrise that the fog set in. It was a dense cloud and at first impalpable to the eye, beyond tent or a dozen feet. Just before 9 o'clock there were indications that the sun was burning through the mist on shore.

Aside from the fact that Kearsarge, at least, was still at anchor off this place, little was actually known here as to the positions of the various ships of Admiral Higginson's squadron, which were last reported off Portland.

At 11 o'clock the fog had lifted and the battleships were in their usual positions. Observations in the distance, however, was impossible owing to a haze which hung low over the water.

On board the flagship Kearsarge, Friday, Aug. 22, 11 a. m.—Admiral Higginson has his three battleships at anchor in the same positions that they occupied at sundown last night.
