What Did Andrew Carnegie Say About Cattle Raising in Nebraska?

"We traverse all day a vast prairie watered by the Platte. Nothing could be finer. Such fields of corn, such herds of cattle grazing at will. Endless herds of cattle untrammelled by fences. No wonder we export beef, for it is fed here for nothing and horses and cattle thrive on the rich grasses as if fed on oats; no flies, no mosquitoes, nothing to disturb or annoy, while the pellucid streams that run through the ranches furnish the best water. Large profits have been made in the trade—the best assurance that it will grow."
—Round the World, Oct. 20, 1878.
