New Novel by Charles Felton Pidgin Tells "What Might Have Been."

SECOND VOLUME SHAKESPEAREAN WARS

Fourteen Clever Golf Stories by Edwin L. Sabin "Sea Fighters from Drake to Farragut" "New Banking Book."

The key-note to the theme of "The Glass" is a new novel by Charles Felton Pidgin, in found in the sub-title of the romance, "What Might Have Been." He tells what might have happened to this country, its people, and its institutions if Aaron Burr had been elected governor of New York at the time he aspired to that office.

The second volume of Charles Scribner's Sons' "Shakespearean Wars" has appeared. It is by Prof. T. R. Lounsbury of Yale, entitled "Shakespeare and Voltaire," and is devoted entirely to the part played by Voltaire in Shakespearean controversy.

"The Magic Mashe" is a volume of fourteen very clever golf stories by Edwin L. Sabin issued by A. W. Weston company. Sabin is a well known contributor to the magazines and of the stories in the volume several have appeared in Outing, Golf and other magazines devoted to sport and outdoor life.

Memoirs of John Russell Young, which have been collected by his widow under the name of "Men and Memories" and issued in two volumes which have already reached their second edition, form a collection of personal reminiscences by a man distinguished in life and letters, who in his career has come in contact with men of note almost without number in various walks of life.

A new novel by Ruth Hall is "The Dawn-venter's Son." It contains abundant adventure and incident. It deals with a little-known eddy in the stream of New York history—the strange attempt to abolish rents about sixty years ago.

which, it may be predicted, will take a permanent place both as biography and as literature.

"Sea Fighters from Drake to Farragut," is the title of an admirable book of true adventures by Jessie Peabody Forthingham. It deals with the careers of Drake, Tromp, DeRuyter, Tourville, Suffren, Paul Jones, Nelson and Farragut, illustrating the genius of each of these great commanders by pages from their perilous life histories.

"The Prophet of the Real" is a strange story by Esther Miller. The heroine is Alice Durand. She becomes secretary to Anthony Vershovic, a writer of romances. In one of his novels his leading character is to be a young woman, whose mother has murdered her father.

"Money and Banking," by Horace White, has been issued in a revised edition. The first edition of this work, was prepared to meet popular demand for information on the money question in the presidential campaign of 1896.

"In the Gates of Israel," with sub-title, "Stories of the Jews," is the title of a new volume by Herman Bernstein. "Sorch Rivke's Vigil" is singularly pathetic. Sorch's husband, Mashe, is cantor of a New York synagogue, and because of his New York life he has become orthodox.

"In the Days of St. Clair," by James Ball Taylor, author of "Ralph Marlowe," is a romance of the Muskogee which bests the early days with its management of the early pioneers who formed the little colony at Marietta; the bitter hardships of roughing it during the long winter months; the constant worry and vigilance against Indian attacks, and the dreadful massacre at Big Bottom.

"The Voice of the People," by Ellen Glasgow, author of "The Battle Ground," is a tale of Virginia life after the civil war. Miss Glasgow is a popular and entertaining writer. It is a most dramatic story, in which the love-interest and the fine character drawing are heightened by the sharp conflict in which the social condition of the century figures in a most bitterly contested political fight.

continue to grow in favor with the masses, but finally falls a victim to his own indomitable love of justice and his sense of duty while endeavoring to quiet a mob bent on lynching a negro. Thus ends the life and tale of "The man with a conscience," "Honest Nick Burr." Published by Doubleday, Page & Co.

In "By the Stage Door," just published by the Grafton Press of New York, Miss Ada Patterson and Miss Victoria Bateman have given an unusually interesting and real picture of the lives of theatrical folk. Both of these authors are well fitted from their own experiences to write of stage life.

"Margaret Tudor" is a romance of old St. Augustine, by Annie T. Colcock. The story is a journal left by Margaret Tudor, giving the experiences of herself and lover while in captivity, beginning June 29, 1570, in a book entitled "On Fortune's Road."

"The October Pearson" opens with one of the most interesting of its entertaining series, "The Story of the States." The position of New York City as a world metropolis has seemed to entitle it to a separate article, and Mr. Gustav Kobbé presents a picture of modern New York, with its bustle of commercial activity, its immense financial interests, its skyscrapers and other modern improvements, which, against the background of the leisurely mode of life and primitive customs of old New Amsterdam, stands out vividly as an exponent of the strenuous life of the present day.

The Proper Treatment for a Sprained Ankle. As a rule a man will feel well satisfied if he can hobble around on crutches two or three weeks after spraining his ankle and it is usually two or three months before he has fully recovered.

"The Voice of the People," by Ellen Glasgow, author of "The Battle Ground," is a tale of Virginia life after the civil war. Miss Glasgow is a popular and entertaining writer. It is a most dramatic story, in which the love-interest and the fine character drawing are heightened by the sharp conflict in which the social condition of the century figures in a most bitterly contested political fight.

AFFAIRS AT SOUTH OMAHA

Another Effort Being Made to Secure Viaduct to the Stock Yards.

SALOON CASES CALLED AND PUT OVER

Frank Dolezal Takes a Shot at a Burglar Whom He Detects Attempting to Gain Entrance to His Saloon.

It was stated yesterday that another effort would be made by the Stock Yards company to endeavor to secure the permission of the council of South Omaha to vacate certain portions of Railroad avenue. Some time ago this was attempted, but the council then decided that the application did not come in a formal manner and refused to recognize such a communication.

Stock yards people stated yesterday that the amount of the street they would now want vacated is much smaller than was originally desired, as the trackage could probably be condensed materially. They stated that as yet they had not reconsidered their offer to build the O street viaduct at their own cost and would do so as soon as the council would signify a willingness to give them the land wanted.

Frank Dolezal had an exciting experience with a burglar yesterday morning. Dolezal was passing his saloon at 2411 N street when he saw a man crawling into one of the side windows. He immediately opened fire and the robber ran away.

FRENCHMAN IS MOVING SOME Travels Twelve Thousand Miles in America in Less Than Thirty Days.

Over 12,000 miles in less than thirty days may not be much traveling for Nellie Bly and George Francis Train, or other strenuous Americans, but it strikes Europeans, who are accustomed to move more moderately, as a pretty rapid gait.

Mr. Malreese started from New York about the first of September for California and was back in the Empire state on September 22. He went to California with a view of investing in American vineyard and wine industries and was, therefore, detained some time in the golden west. He made the trip from Omaha and back on the Union Pacific and now writes a very glowing description of his trip, volunteering the statement that "it surpasses anything in the way of travel that I have ever experienced."

LOCAL BREVITIES. George Pitchers of Eighteenth street and St. Mary's avenue was arrested yesterday afternoon for peddling on the streets without a license for lighting. The trouble was with another man who has an interest in the stand.

While walking along at the corner of Fourteenth and Douglas streets about 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, Jack Allen, a printer from Arcadia, Ia., was struck down by a partial paralysis. He was lifted into the patrol wagon and taken to the police station. Surgeon Hahn and his staff found that his limbs were entirely paralyzed, but that the upper part of the body was unaffected. He was later taken to St. Joseph's hospital.

Four subjects of the Austro-Hungarian empire, whose names seem to be John Babic, John Rodic, Anton Rodic and John Rodic, were arrested last night in Louis Lissner's saloon for disturbing the peace. The quartet have been staying at the Cambridge hotel for about two weeks and have quarreled most of the time. The trouble reached a head last night when Babic threatened to cut the throat of the younger of the men named Rodic.

Logan Watson, a negro who arrived in the city only a week ago from Kansas City, and has been staying at the corner of Fifteenth and Dodge streets since came to the police station yesterday evening to have his face renovated. He had been hit across the countenance with a piece of gas pipe and his features had swollen up until his profile resembled that of a pig. Watson would only say that he had had a fight with a white man up the street and that he would not file a complaint. He was not arrested.
