MUMMIES A LONG TIME DEAD

Remnants of the Oldest Inhabitants of Egypt Brought to Light.

POTATATES AND LORE OF CENTURIES AGO

Striking Story of Human Pomp and Vanity Uncovered by the Excavations of the German Oriental Society.

In all the history of excavation no such intensely human story has been dug out of the forgotten past as has been brought to day by the recent work of the German Oriental society of Berlin at the Pyramid of Abusir.

The Fit OF GLASSES

is of the greatest importance—not only for comfort—but to avoid actual danger. The lenses must be accurately adjusted in every way and correctly centered. Many opticians—careful in other respects—often overlook the importance of accurate fitting. We give it special attention and have frames of every size and shape on hand, enabling us to supply the correct size and style at all times. The H. J. Penfold Co. ### Egypt were his. When he died men began to build a vast temple of the dead for him. Four thousand and five hundred years ago they buried Ne-woser-re, the king. And the centuries passed and his temple, unfinished, disappeared below the drifting sands. He and his family, his royal favorite and his high priests, became hidden deep below the dwellings of succeeding kings and priests, and their tombs were piled over all. Then they, too, sank away and were forgotten. Others built and died—Egyptian, Greek and Christian in their turns. The great clock of history still wanted a thousand years to the time of the coming of Christ, and Ne-woser-re, the king, was so utterly lost and forgotten that the poorest of the poor were buried on top of the mounds that hid his imperial tomb—the tomb which had been set by its mighty builders to defy eternity itself.

The High Priest's Tomb.

Then the diggers reached the tomb of the high priest, Jem-em-Jachwet. After breaking out the first stone, the Europeans peered in and for the first time in forty-five centuries human eyes looked upon the coffins of the priests of Ne-woser-re. The tomb had been too small for the last coffins and the handles had been sawed from the ends before the stones were set in place and sealed. Those cuts of the saw were clear and sharp, just as they had been left on that day of burial.

laid on by hands and brushes of which there had been no vestige left on earth for 4,000 years, were bright and glowing, shining out of their long-kept darkness into the light of today as if they were still wet. But scarcely had the sun streamed in before they began to pale. Fortunately the expedition numbered a skillful painter among its members, and he succeeded in making a true copy in full size of the ancient work of art.

Another model was that of the granary.

In the courtyard is shown the delivery of the grain. Servants are seen carrying it upstairs, where it is poured into the bins in the upper story. Some are grinding corn; others are baking bread. A woman was found next. She was a Sat-Nofer, the favorite of the king. In that gorgeous life of 4,500 years ago no doubt she had been beautiful and clothed with rich apparel and surrounded with loveliness and luxury. But in death she was not to lie as lay the true queen or her master. Placed in a rude coffin of thin wood, she was put away in a bare chamber far from the habitations of the royal dead. Hardly any gifts were laid with her. Instead, as if in irony—a grim joke that was to wait for inconceivable time to make its point—they laid by the coffin of the poor, forgotten courtesan a bronze mirror without a handle and a little stone used for grinding rouge.

Under the head was a wooden head rest.

It is shaped exactly like the wooden pillow that is used to this day in the Soudan. By his side lay a little wooden statue representing him. According to Egyptian belief this statue was to do the dead man's work for him in the under world. A handsome coffin in another chamber contained the mummy of a man who must have been exceptionally rich, for around his neck was a string of real pearls, while others, even high officials, had to be content with painted ones. The gifts that had been placed by his side made a little history of that age in themselves. In a niche at the head of the coffin were stone vessels, bound with leather, that had con-

taind salves and precious ointments.

There were resting on carved lion's claws. Under it stood a waxen vessel and two bags filled with what apparently were face paints. A whole set of carpenter's tools was found in the rear of this chamber. There were saws, drills, augurs, axes, awls and polishing stones. A History of the Feast. When the coffin was dragged out a new surprise waited in a cavity behind it. There were beautiful models of ships of the dead. One was shown with belfry sail; another with lowered mast was being moved by rowers. There was the dead man's kitchen in a miniature model. A butcher is in the act of cutting the throat of a steer. Another is catching the blood. The aprons of both are bright red with it. Alongside of them squats another cook broiling a goose on a spit. The models has many figures of female servants. Some are grinding corn; others are baking bread.

Its inscription told that it contained the body of Abhem, the son of Oeri, who had come from Asia and who was very rich and famous. But when the coffin was opened there lay in it a withered mummy, evidently that of a very lovely person. Before long, other coffins were found with the same peculiarity. So it became apparent that the poor used to erict the noble corpses of the past and clothe themselves in death in the pomp which they had missed in life—a strange picture of human vanity preserved by faithful time. Others, apparently, could not afford to buy old coffins, but still demanding burial of noble circumstances, they were incased in gorgeous earthen cylinders looking grotesquely like the water pipes of today. A poor Egyptian mother of the past had left the token of her love in one tomb. Two children were found there confined in the slender double-handled wine jugs of the period.

The Poem of Timotheos.

When the party reached the Greek period, the great discovery was made of the poem by Timotheos. It was found in a mighty wooden coffin. A Greek had been buried there long before the time of the Man of Galilee. With him had been interred a roll of papyrus. Unrolled, it proved to be about four feet long, containing five columns of Greek verse written in ancient runical characters. The excavators at once sent for Dr. Rubensson, who was in Cairo at the time seeking Greek manuscripts for the Berlin museum, and he declared that it was probably the oldest Greek book ever discovered. Later Ulrich von Wilamowitz-Moellendorf, the great European authority, confirmed this. He says: "It is the oldest Greek book, undoubtedly older than the time of the beginning of bookmaking as originated by the founding of the Alexandrian library. The man in whose coffin it was found was certainly buried early in the fourth century before Christ."

men of Asia Minor, appealing to their gods for help. "The fight continues. The victors capture the survivors of the defeated Persian power. Then comes the order of the great Persian king to break camp and retreat along the sea shore. "Those on the other shore have erected their altar of sacrifice to Zeus; they sing the song of victory and stamp with their feet in high leaping dance." So, simply like a Homeric poem, ends the song.
