Commissioners for the Insane Have a Peculiar Case to Pass Upon. August Doerner, a 17-year-old student at Union college, the Seventh Day Adventist institution at College View, near Lincoln, Neb., was before the Board of Commissioners for the Insane yesterday on complaint of Julius Korgan, a well-known farmer living eight miles east of Council Bluffs, who charged young Doerner with preying the doctrine of the examination before the commissioners developed a most remarkable story, in which religion and cupid played prominent parts. Young Doerner came to the United States from Germany, where his father is one of the prominent leaders in the Seventh Day Adventist church, seventeen months ago, to take a course of study at Union college and prepare for the ministry. There he met and won the love of three young women, students at the institution. The frequency with which he wooed and won the hearts of the opposite sex was cited in the testimony before the board as one of his "peculiarities" and evidence of his being mentally weak.

HOAR'S ANTI-TRUST BILL

The bill provides that such prohibition shall only be enforced after such corporation or other association has been enjoined against further engaging in such business, on an information or suit brought in the United States court of competent jurisdiction, by the attorney general, in behalf of the government. It also provides that the attorney general in any case, unless he shall be satisfied that the public interest is not thereby promoted, shall not be bound to enforce the provision by proceeding either by information or by indictment, as he may in his discretion see fit to do.
