

NEW BOOKS AND MAGAZINES

An Interesting Story of Irish Life by Elizabeth O'Reilly Neville.

SECOND BOOK OF VERSES BY WATERMAN

"Onward and Upward" is the Title of Archbishop Keane's Latest Book—Many Features of Unusual Merit in Ainslee's Magazine.

To the lover of the sea and the mountains as well as the old and picturesque in human nature, Elizabeth O'Reilly Neville's story of "Father Tom of Connemara," appears with irresistible force. Isolated by the great lakes on one side, with the mighty Atlantic washing their shores on the other, inhabitants of Ireland's highlands have retained through centuries their customs, habits and language intact.

This wonderful nature—Connemara—is described with a power and skill that is rarely to be met with in these days of careless writing. The description is so realistic, in fact, that the reader feels the scent of gorse and heather, mingled with that of the multitudinous wild flowers that in many instances almost cover the mountains, and yet above all is distinguished the sweet salt breath of the sea.

Father Tom may be compared to the Vicar of Wakefield. He is not devoid of faults, but they are of the head, not the heart. Throughout the book he is shown to be the truly counsellor the district and the "father" in fact of the district and a friend of everyone whether they belong to his fold or not.

From grave to gay, from lively to severe, these mountain characters run, and the interest in narratives and their histories obtained from the start to the close. Father Tom of Connemara is rich in the ingredients that are provocative of both tears and laughter. The book is beautifully illustrated with photographs of scenes and characters in Connemara. Rand McNally & Co., publishers, Chicago and New York.

Nixon Waterman introduces his second book of verse, "In Merry Mood," with a bit of pleasantry that puts the reader in good humor and prepares him for what comes after. He says:

In shaping up this book of rhymes, I do not mind admitting I changed them more than a dozen times. To make them seem more fitting. I know the first one ought to be so fashioned on the spot. And make him read, and so, you see, I've tried to find the best one. Published by Forbes & Co.

We have received from the John Murphy Publishing Company Archbishop Keane's latest book, "Onward and Upward." Few men are better known in America and Europe than Archbishop Keane. A preacher and lecturer he has been everywhere heard with interest, as a leading exponent of the religious thought of our times. His ideal is the Incarnation—the Divine living and acting in the perfect human. The embodiment of this ideal in the life of today has been the constant aim. There has been a demand for a book that would present the quietness of his thoughts. This is now offered to the public. It is sure to have a wide and hearty welcome. In 400 pages—a page for each day of the year he writes in daily thought the depth and beauty of the sublime and the familiar things which make up life. Each month develops a theme, in the following order: Right Living—Religion—Home—Education—The Ideal Woman—The Ideal Man—Christianity—Social Ideals—American Progress—Art—Brotherhood—Death and Resurrection.

There can be no possible doubt about the continued prosperity of Ainslee's Magazine, owing to the universal excellence and originality of each succeeding number. In the February issue the leading novel is entitled "Money and Matrimony," by Josephine Dixon, and presents a vivid and witty picture of life in Washington. Nothing at once so humorous and so human has been published in any magazine for many months. Another amusing feature is a short story by Felicia Goddard, entitled "The Babs' Club." Elizabeth Duer is in evidence with a strong story of modern life, "Aunt Rebecca's Christmas," and the story by Oliver Henry, is a splendid story of strenuous life in the southwest. It is full of drama and the picturesque color of the locality. A most original contribution and one that is bound to excite interest, which, naturally, appears without any signature. Undoubtedly this is a bona fide statement, because the interviews and letters it contains are from such people as Charles Frohman, Daniel Frohman, Mrs. Fiske, Mrs. Patrick Campbell and others equally celebrated. "Thyrza's Dupes," by Helen C. Candee, is a decidedly bright story of the troubles of an elderly widower in keeping his only daughter from the snares of an ineligible marriage. "At the Russian Bath," by Katherine M. Root, is a short play in dialogue form, and is laid in a unique scene. There are only some of the features of Ainslee's for February. In all, the contents page contains about thirty-five items of prose and poetry from the foremost authors of the day.

"The Thousand Eugeniads" is a novel by Mrs. Alfred Sedgwick in which she tells of her own adventures, coming as they do from impending poverty and a most disagreeable environment by a summons to Paris to meet a rich uncle whom she has never seen. Her experiences with M. and Mme. Varadin, a pair of continental adventurers, coming as they do with a big Briton, form the narrative, and the plot turns upon the tragic outcome of her uncle's gift to her of 1,000 shares in the Eugeniads mine. The story fills considerably more than half the book, is followed by several shorter sketches, entitled, "Anne and the Anarchist," "The Last Straw," "Aunt Tommasina," "An Iconoclast," "Waltzinger," Published by Longmans, Green & Co.

"Fool's Gold," by Annie Raymond Stillman, is a romance in which plot and action yield a large tribute to the strong purpose of the book. It is a story of conflict between duty and supposed self-interest, and constantly the values of selfishness and selflessness are opposed. The situations are intense and the title most apt, being drawn from an early incident in the book, where a mining intendant occupies the center of intrigue, and throughout the entire story the value of gold, whether applied to character or to the precious metal, is contrasted with "Fool's Gold," the clever counterfeit of King of Minerals, or in the realm of the hypocrite. Published by Fleming H. Revell Co.

"The Old Schoolhouse and Other Poems and Conceits in Verse," by T. S. Denison, author of "An Iron Crown," "The Man Behind the Volume," contains fifty-eight poems, covering a wide range of thought. It is divided into (I) Miscellaneous Poems, (II) Poems of Love, (III) Poems of Travel, (IV) Poems of War, (V) The Tyrant Immortal (a study). It is illustrated by Morris B. Alshouse. Published by T. S. Denison, Chicago.

The romance of "Old New England Roof-trees," by Mary C. Crawford, is a book which tells of the most famous of those old New England houses which still stand, and has picked out from their histories those elements of romance which are best adapted to catch the interest of the general reader. Among the stories told are: "The Maid of Marblehead" (Agnes Surridge); "Molly Sisk's Gentleman Son," "The Message of the Lantern," "In the Reign of the Witches," "Inventor Morse's Unfulfilled Ambition," "Margaret Fuller," closing in quite modern times with a chapter entitled "Whittier's Lost Love." The book is pleasantly written, the author showing a genuine affection for her subject, and great care has evidently been taken to make a final and authentic presentation of these stories, for reference as well as for their intrinsic interest. Published by L. C. Page & Co.

"Twentieth Century Manual of Railway and Commercial Telegraphy" is thoroughly illustrated with cuts and engravings, showing the technical parts of a telegraph instrument, also accurate drawings in black and white and in colors, the latter showing the regulation practical color signals used on blocks and on trains and engines. This feature of reproducing the color signals greatly enhances the value of the manual. In addition to these illustrations there are given full simple telegrams, train orders, railway messages and commercial and railway forms as they are actually used, as well as a glance that part of a message which goes over the wire, as distinguished from the printed portion. Published by Rand, McNally & Co.

In "Animals Before Man in North America," F. A. Lucas tells us about the extremely ancient animals that once peopled the land, treating the history by periods and describing the habits, appearance and relationships of the more conspicuous animals. Dr. Lucas is thoroughly acquainted with his subject and has written an entertainingly and interestingly of his life of a bygone age. Published by D. Appleton.

"A Quiver of Arrows," sermons of David Burrell, D. D., L. L. D., selected and compiled by F. A. Lucas, tells us about the extremely ancient animals that once peopled the land, treating the history by periods and describing the habits, appearance and relationships of the more conspicuous animals. Dr. Lucas is thoroughly acquainted with his subject and has written an entertainingly and interestingly of his life of a bygone age. Published by D. Appleton.

"The Thousand Eugeniads" is a novel by Mrs. Alfred Sedgwick in which she tells of her own adventures, coming as they do from impending poverty and a most disagreeable environment by a summons to Paris to meet a rich uncle whom she has never seen. Her experiences with M. and Mme. Varadin, a pair of continental adventurers, coming as they do with a big Briton, form the narrative, and the plot turns upon the tragic outcome of her uncle's gift to her of 1,000 shares in the Eugeniads mine. The story fills considerably more than half the book, is followed by

NEW BOOKS AND MAGAZINES

An Interesting Story of Irish Life by Elizabeth O'Reilly Neville.

SECOND BOOK OF VERSES BY WATERMAN

"Onward and Upward" is the Title of Archbishop Keane's Latest Book—Many Features of Unusual Merit in Ainslee's Magazine.

To the lover of the sea and the mountains as well as the old and picturesque in human nature, Elizabeth O'Reilly Neville's story of "Father Tom of Connemara," appears with irresistible force. Isolated by the great lakes on one side, with the mighty Atlantic washing their shores on the other, inhabitants of Ireland's highlands have retained through centuries their customs, habits and language intact.

This wonderful nature—Connemara—is described with a power and skill that is rarely to be met with in these days of careless writing. The description is so realistic, in fact, that the reader feels the scent of gorse and heather, mingled with that of the multitudinous wild flowers that in many instances almost cover the mountains, and yet above all is distinguished the sweet salt breath of the sea.

Father Tom may be compared to the Vicar of Wakefield. He is not devoid of faults, but they are of the head, not the heart. Throughout the book he is shown to be the truly counsellor the district and the "father" in fact of the district and a friend of everyone whether they belong to his fold or not.

From grave to gay, from lively to severe, these mountain characters run, and the interest in narratives and their histories obtained from the start to the close. Father Tom of Connemara is rich in the ingredients that are provocative of both tears and laughter. The book is beautifully illustrated with photographs of scenes and characters in Connemara. Rand McNally & Co., publishers, Chicago and New York.

Nixon Waterman introduces his second book of verse, "In Merry Mood," with a bit of pleasantry that puts the reader in good humor and prepares him for what comes after. He says:

In shaping up this book of rhymes, I do not mind admitting I changed them more than a dozen times. To make them seem more fitting. I know the first one ought to be so fashioned on the spot. And make him read, and so, you see, I've tried to find the best one. Published by Forbes & Co.

We have received from the John Murphy Publishing Company Archbishop Keane's latest book, "Onward and Upward." Few men are better known in America and Europe than Archbishop Keane. A preacher and lecturer he has been everywhere heard with interest, as a leading exponent of the religious thought of our times. His ideal is the Incarnation—the Divine living and acting in the perfect human. The embodiment of this ideal in the life of today has been the constant aim. There has been a demand for a book that would present the quietness of his thoughts. This is now offered to the public. It is sure to have a wide and hearty welcome. In 400 pages—a page for each day of the year he writes in daily thought the depth and beauty of the sublime and the familiar things which make up life. Each month develops a theme, in the following order: Right Living—Religion—Home—Education—The Ideal Woman—The Ideal Man—Christianity—Social Ideals—American Progress—Art—Brotherhood—Death and Resurrection.

There can be no possible doubt about the continued prosperity of Ainslee's Magazine, owing to the universal excellence and originality of each succeeding number. In the February issue the leading novel is entitled "Money and Matrimony," by Josephine Dixon, and presents a vivid and witty picture of life in Washington. Nothing at once so humorous and so human has been published in any magazine for many months. Another amusing feature is a short story by Felicia Goddard, entitled "The Babs' Club." Elizabeth Duer is in evidence with a strong story of modern life, "Aunt Rebecca's Christmas," and the story by Oliver Henry, is a splendid story of strenuous life in the southwest. It is full of drama and the picturesque color of the locality. A most original contribution and one that is bound to excite interest, which, naturally, appears without any signature. Undoubtedly this is a bona fide statement, because the interviews and letters it contains are from such people as Charles Frohman, Daniel Frohman, Mrs. Fiske, Mrs. Patrick Campbell and others equally celebrated. "Thyrza's Dupes," by Helen C. Candee, is a decidedly bright story of the troubles of an elderly widower in keeping his only daughter from the snares of an ineligible marriage. "At the Russian Bath," by Katherine M. Root, is a short play in dialogue form, and is laid in a unique scene. There are only some of the features of Ainslee's for February. In all, the contents page contains about thirty-five items of prose and poetry from the foremost authors of the day.

"The Thousand Eugeniads" is a novel by Mrs. Alfred Sedgwick in which she tells of her own adventures, coming as they do from impending poverty and a most disagreeable environment by a summons to Paris to meet a rich uncle whom she has never seen. Her experiences with M. and Mme. Varadin, a pair of continental adventurers, coming as they do with a big Briton, form the narrative, and the plot turns upon the tragic outcome of her uncle's gift to her of 1,000 shares in the Eugeniads mine. The story fills considerably more than half the book, is followed by several shorter sketches, entitled, "Anne and the Anarchist," "The Last Straw," "Aunt Tommasina," "An Iconoclast," "Waltzinger," Published by Longmans, Green & Co.

"Fool's Gold," by Annie Raymond Stillman, is a romance in which plot and action yield a large tribute to the strong purpose of the book. It is a story of conflict between duty and supposed self-interest, and constantly the values of selfishness and selflessness are opposed. The situations are intense and the title most apt, being drawn from an early incident in the book, where a mining intendant occupies the center of intrigue, and throughout the entire story the value of gold, whether applied to character or to the precious metal, is contrasted with "Fool's Gold," the clever counterfeit of King of Minerals, or in the realm of the hypocrite. Published by Fleming H. Revell Co.

"The Old Schoolhouse and Other Poems and Conceits in Verse," by T. S. Denison, author of "An Iron Crown," "The Man Behind the Volume," contains fifty-eight poems, covering a wide range of thought. It is divided into (I) Miscellaneous Poems, (II) Poems of Love, (III) Poems of Travel, (IV) Poems of War, (V) The Tyrant Immortal (a study). It is illustrated by Morris B. Alshouse. Published by T. S. Denison, Chicago.

The romance of "Old New England Roof-trees," by Mary C. Crawford, is a book which tells of the most famous of those old New England houses which still stand, and has picked out from their histories those elements of romance which are best adapted to catch the interest of the general reader. Among the stories told are: "The Maid of Marblehead" (Agnes Surridge); "Molly Sisk's Gentleman Son," "The Message of the Lantern," "In the Reign of the Witches," "Inventor Morse's Unfulfilled Ambition," "Margaret Fuller," closing in quite modern times with a chapter entitled "Whittier's Lost Love." The book is pleasantly written, the author showing a genuine affection for her subject, and great care has evidently been taken to make a final and authentic presentation of these stories, for reference as well as for their intrinsic interest. Published by L. C. Page & Co.

"Twentieth Century Manual of Railway and Commercial Telegraphy" is thoroughly illustrated with cuts and engravings, showing the technical parts of a telegraph instrument, also accurate drawings in black and white and in colors, the latter showing the regulation practical color signals used on blocks and on trains and engines. This feature of reproducing the color signals greatly enhances the value of the manual. In addition to these illustrations there are given full simple telegrams, train orders, railway messages and commercial and railway forms as they are actually used, as well as a glance that part of a message which goes over the wire, as distinguished from the printed portion. Published by Rand, McNally & Co.

In "Animals Before Man in North America," F. A. Lucas tells us about the extremely ancient animals that once peopled the land, treating the history by periods and describing the habits, appearance and relationships of the more conspicuous animals. Dr. Lucas is thoroughly acquainted with his subject and has written an entertainingly and interestingly of his life of a bygone age. Published by D. Appleton.

"A Quiver of Arrows," sermons of David Burrell, D. D., L. L. D., selected and compiled by F. A. Lucas, tells us about the extremely ancient animals that once peopled the land, treating the history by periods and describing the habits, appearance and relationships of the more conspicuous animals. Dr. Lucas is thoroughly acquainted with his subject and has written an entertainingly and interestingly of his life of a bygone age. Published by D. Appleton.

"The Thousand Eugeniads" is a novel by Mrs. Alfred Sedgwick in which she tells of her own adventures, coming as they do from impending poverty and a most disagreeable environment by a summons to Paris to meet a rich uncle whom she has never seen. Her experiences with M. and Mme. Varadin, a pair of continental adventurers, coming as they do with a big Briton, form the narrative, and the plot turns upon the tragic outcome of her uncle's gift to her of 1,000 shares in the Eugeniads mine. The story fills considerably more than half the book, is followed by

NEW BOOKS AND MAGAZINES

An Interesting Story of Irish Life by Elizabeth O'Reilly Neville.

SECOND BOOK OF VERSES BY WATERMAN

"Onward and Upward" is the Title of Archbishop Keane's Latest Book—Many Features of Unusual Merit in Ainslee's Magazine.

To the lover of the sea and the mountains as well as the old and picturesque in human nature, Elizabeth O'Reilly Neville's story of "Father Tom of Connemara," appears with irresistible force. Isolated by the great lakes on one side, with the mighty Atlantic washing their shores on the other, inhabitants of Ireland's highlands have retained through centuries their customs, habits and language intact.

This wonderful nature—Connemara—is described with a power and skill that is rarely to be met with in these days of careless writing. The description is so realistic, in fact, that the reader feels the scent of gorse and heather, mingled with that of the multitudinous wild flowers that in many instances almost cover the mountains, and yet above all is distinguished the sweet salt breath of the sea.

Father Tom may be compared to the Vicar of Wakefield. He is not devoid of faults, but they are of the head, not the heart. Throughout the book he is shown to be the truly counsellor the district and the "father" in fact of the district and a friend of everyone whether they belong to his fold or not.

From grave to gay, from lively to severe, these mountain characters run, and the interest in narratives and their histories obtained from the start to the close. Father Tom of Connemara is rich in the ingredients that are provocative of both tears and laughter. The book is beautifully illustrated with photographs of scenes and characters in Connemara. Rand McNally & Co., publishers, Chicago and New York.

Nixon Waterman introduces his second book of verse, "In Merry Mood," with a bit of pleasantry that puts the reader in good humor and prepares him for what comes after. He says:

In shaping up this book of rhymes, I do not mind admitting I changed them more than a dozen times. To make them seem more fitting. I know the first one ought to be so fashioned on the spot. And make him read, and so, you see, I've tried to find the best one. Published by Forbes & Co.

We have received from the John Murphy Publishing Company Archbishop Keane's latest book, "Onward and Upward." Few men are better known in America and Europe than Archbishop Keane. A preacher and lecturer he has been everywhere heard with interest, as a leading exponent of the religious thought of our times. His ideal is the Incarnation—the Divine living and acting in the perfect human. The embodiment of this ideal in the life of today has been the constant aim. There has been a demand for a book that would present the quietness of his thoughts. This is now offered to the public. It is sure to have a wide and hearty welcome. In 400 pages—a page for each day of the year he writes in daily thought the depth and beauty of the sublime and the familiar things which make up life. Each month develops a theme, in the following order: Right Living—Religion—Home—Education—The Ideal Woman—The Ideal Man—Christianity—Social Ideals—American Progress—Art—Brotherhood—Death and Resurrection.

There can be no possible doubt about the continued prosperity of Ainslee's Magazine, owing to the universal excellence and originality of each succeeding number. In the February issue the leading novel is entitled "Money and Matrimony," by Josephine Dixon, and presents a vivid and witty picture of life in Washington. Nothing at once so humorous and so human has been published in any magazine for many months. Another amusing feature is a short story by Felicia Goddard, entitled "The Babs' Club." Elizabeth Duer is in evidence with a strong story of modern life, "Aunt Rebecca's Christmas," and the story by Oliver Henry, is a splendid story of strenuous life in the southwest. It is full of drama and the picturesque color of the locality. A most original contribution and one that is bound to excite interest, which, naturally, appears without any signature. Undoubtedly this is a bona fide statement, because the interviews and letters it contains are from such people as Charles Frohman, Daniel Frohman, Mrs. Fiske, Mrs. Patrick Campbell and others equally celebrated. "Thyrza's Dupes," by Helen C. Candee, is a decidedly bright story of the troubles of an elderly widower in keeping his only daughter from the snares of an ineligible marriage. "At the Russian Bath," by Katherine M. Root, is a short play in dialogue form, and is laid in a unique scene. There are only some of the features of Ainslee's for February. In all, the contents page contains about thirty-five items of prose and poetry from the foremost authors of the day.

"The Thousand Eugeniads" is a novel by Mrs. Alfred Sedgwick in which she tells of her own adventures, coming as they do from impending poverty and a most disagreeable environment by a summons to Paris to meet a rich uncle whom she has never seen. Her experiences with M. and Mme. Varadin, a pair of continental adventurers, coming as they do with a big Briton, form the narrative, and the plot turns upon the tragic outcome of her uncle's gift to her of 1,000 shares in the Eugeniads mine. The story fills considerably more than half the book, is followed by several shorter sketches, entitled, "Anne and the Anarchist," "The Last Straw," "Aunt Tommasina," "An Iconoclast," "Waltzinger," Published by Longmans, Green & Co.

"Fool's Gold," by Annie Raymond Stillman, is a romance in which plot and action yield a large tribute to the strong purpose of the book. It is a story of conflict between duty and supposed self-interest, and constantly the values of selfishness and selflessness are opposed. The situations are intense and the title most apt, being drawn from an early incident in the book, where a mining intendant occupies the center of intrigue, and throughout the entire story the value of gold, whether applied to character or to the precious metal, is contrasted with "Fool's Gold," the clever counterfeit of King of Minerals, or in the realm of the hypocrite. Published by Fleming H. Revell Co.

"The Old Schoolhouse and Other Poems and Conceits in Verse," by T. S. Denison, author of "An Iron Crown," "The Man Behind the Volume," contains fifty-eight poems, covering a wide range of thought. It is divided into (I) Miscellaneous Poems, (II) Poems of Love, (III) Poems of Travel, (IV) Poems of War, (V) The Tyrant Immortal (a study). It is illustrated by Morris B. Alshouse. Published by T. S. Denison, Chicago.

The romance of "Old New England Roof-trees," by Mary C. Crawford, is a book which tells of the most famous of those old New England houses which still stand, and has picked out from their histories those elements of romance which are best adapted to catch the interest of the general reader. Among the stories told are: "The Maid of Marblehead" (Agnes Surridge); "Molly Sisk's Gentleman Son," "The Message of the Lantern," "In the Reign of the Witches," "Inventor Morse's Unfulfilled Ambition," "Margaret Fuller," closing in quite modern times with a chapter entitled "Whittier's Lost Love." The book is pleasantly written, the author showing a genuine affection for her subject, and great care has evidently been taken to make a final and authentic presentation of these stories, for reference as well as for their intrinsic interest. Published by L. C. Page & Co.

"Twentieth Century Manual of Railway and Commercial Telegraphy" is thoroughly illustrated with cuts and engravings, showing the technical parts of a telegraph instrument, also accurate drawings in black and white and in colors, the latter showing the regulation practical color signals used on blocks and on trains and engines. This feature of reproducing the color signals greatly enhances the value of the manual. In addition to these illustrations there are given full simple telegrams, train orders, railway messages and commercial and railway forms as they are actually used, as well as a glance that part of a message which goes over the wire, as distinguished from the printed portion. Published by Rand, McNally & Co.

In "Animals Before Man in North America," F. A. Lucas tells us about the extremely ancient animals that once peopled the land, treating the history by periods and describing the habits, appearance and relationships of the more conspicuous animals. Dr. Lucas is thoroughly acquainted with his subject and has written an entertainingly and interestingly of his life of a bygone age. Published by D. Appleton.

"A Quiver of Arrows," sermons of David Burrell, D. D., L. L. D., selected and compiled by F. A. Lucas, tells us about the extremely ancient animals that once peopled the land, treating the history by periods and describing the habits, appearance and relationships of the more conspicuous animals. Dr. Lucas is thoroughly acquainted with his subject and has written an entertainingly and interestingly of his life of a bygone age. Published by D. Appleton.

"The Thousand Eugeniads" is a novel by Mrs. Alfred Sedgwick in which she tells of her own adventures, coming as they do from impending poverty and a most disagreeable environment by a summons to Paris to meet a rich uncle whom she has never seen. Her experiences with M. and Mme. Varadin, a pair of continental adventurers, coming as they do with a big Briton, form the narrative, and the plot turns upon the tragic outcome of her uncle's gift to her of 1,000 shares in the Eugeniads mine. The story fills considerably more than half the book, is followed by

NEW BOOKS AND MAGAZINES

An Interesting Story of Irish Life by Elizabeth O'Reilly Neville.

SECOND BOOK OF VERSES BY WATERMAN

"Onward and Upward" is the Title of Archbishop Keane's Latest Book—Many Features of Unusual Merit in Ainslee's Magazine.

To the lover of the sea and the mountains as well as the old and picturesque in human nature, Elizabeth O'Reilly Neville's story of "Father Tom of Connemara," appears with irresistible force. Isolated by the great lakes on one side, with the mighty Atlantic washing their shores on the other, inhabitants of Ireland's highlands have retained through centuries their customs, habits and language intact.

This wonderful nature—Connemara—is described with a power and skill that is rarely to be met with in these days of careless writing. The description is so realistic, in fact, that the reader feels the scent of gorse and heather, mingled with that of the multitudinous wild flowers that in many instances almost cover the mountains, and yet above all is distinguished the sweet salt breath of the sea.

Father Tom may be compared to the Vicar of Wakefield. He is not devoid of faults, but they are of the head, not the heart. Throughout the book he is shown to be the truly counsellor the district and the "father" in fact of the district and a friend of everyone whether they belong to his fold or not.

From grave to gay, from lively to severe, these mountain characters run, and the interest in narratives and their histories obtained from the start to the close. Father Tom of Connemara is rich in the ingredients that are provocative of both tears and laughter. The book is beautifully illustrated with photographs of scenes and characters in Connemara. Rand McNally & Co., publishers, Chicago and New York.

Nixon Waterman introduces his second book of verse, "In Merry Mood," with a bit of pleasantry that puts the reader in good humor and prepares him for what comes after. He says:

In shaping up this book of rhymes, I do not mind admitting I changed them more than a dozen times. To make them seem more fitting. I know the first one ought to be so fashioned on the spot. And make him read, and so, you see, I've tried to find the best one. Published by Forbes & Co.

We have received from the John Murphy Publishing Company Archbishop Keane's latest book, "Onward and Upward." Few men are better known in America and Europe than Archbishop Keane. A preacher and lecturer he has been everywhere heard with interest, as a leading exponent of the religious thought of our times. His ideal is the Incarnation—the Divine living and acting in the perfect human. The embodiment of this ideal in the life of today has been the constant aim. There has been a demand for a book that would present the quietness of his thoughts. This is now offered to the public. It is sure to have a wide and hearty welcome. In 400 pages—a page for each day of the year he writes in daily thought the depth and beauty of the sublime and the familiar things which make up life. Each month develops a theme, in the following order: Right Living—Religion—Home—Education—The Ideal Woman—The Ideal Man—Christianity—Social Ideals—American Progress—Art—Brotherhood—Death and Resurrection.

There can be no possible doubt about the continued prosperity of Ainslee's Magazine, owing to the universal excellence and originality of each succeeding number. In the February issue the leading novel is entitled "Money and Matrimony," by Josephine Dixon, and presents a vivid and witty picture of life in Washington. Nothing at once so humorous and so human has been published in any magazine for many months. Another amusing feature is a short story by Felicia Goddard, entitled "The Babs' Club." Elizabeth Duer is in evidence with a strong story of modern life, "Aunt Rebecca's Christmas," and the story by Oliver Henry, is a splendid story of strenuous life in the southwest. It is full of drama and the picturesque color of the locality. A most original contribution and one that is bound to excite interest, which, naturally, appears without any signature. Undoubtedly this is a bona fide statement, because the interviews and letters it contains are from such people as Charles Frohman, Daniel Frohman, Mrs. Fiske, Mrs. Patrick Campbell and others equally celebrated. "Thyrza's Dupes," by Helen C. Candee, is a decidedly bright story of the troubles of an elderly widower in keeping his only daughter from the snares of an ineligible marriage. "At the Russian Bath," by Katherine M. Root, is a short play in dialogue form, and is laid in a unique scene. There are only some of the features of Ainslee's for February. In all, the contents page contains about thirty-five items of prose and poetry from the foremost authors of the day.

"The Thousand Eugeniads" is a novel by Mrs. Alfred Sedgwick in which she tells of her own adventures, coming as they do from impending poverty and a most disagreeable environment by a summons to Paris to meet a rich uncle whom she has never seen. Her experiences with M. and Mme. Varadin, a pair of continental adventurers, coming as they do with a big Briton, form the narrative, and the plot turns upon the tragic outcome of her uncle's gift to her of 1,000 shares in the Eugeniads mine. The story fills considerably more than half the book, is followed by several shorter sketches, entitled, "Anne and the Anarchist," "The Last Straw," "Aunt Tommasina," "An Iconoclast," "Waltzinger," Published by Longmans, Green & Co.

"Fool's Gold," by Annie Raymond Stillman, is a romance in which plot and action yield a large tribute to the strong purpose of the book. It is a story of conflict between duty and supposed self-interest, and constantly the values of selfishness and selflessness are opposed. The situations are intense and the title most apt, being drawn from an early incident in the book, where a mining intendant occupies the center of intrigue, and throughout the entire story the value of gold, whether applied to character or to the precious metal, is contrasted with "Fool's Gold," the clever counterfeit of King of Minerals, or in the realm of the hypocrite. Published by Fleming H. Revell Co.

"The Old Schoolhouse and Other Poems and Conceits in Verse," by T. S. Denison, author of "An Iron Crown," "The Man Behind the Volume," contains fifty-eight poems, covering a wide range of thought. It is divided into (I) Miscellaneous Poems, (II) Poems of Love, (III) Poems of Travel, (IV) Poems of War, (V) The Tyrant Immortal (a study). It is illustrated by Morris B. Alshouse. Published by T. S. Denison, Chicago.

The romance of "Old New England Roof-trees," by Mary C. Crawford, is a book which tells of the most famous of those old New England houses which still stand, and has picked out from their histories those elements of romance which are best adapted to catch the interest of the general reader. Among the stories told are: "The Maid of Marblehead" (Agnes Surridge); "Molly Sisk's Gentleman Son," "The Message of the Lantern," "In the Reign of the Witches," "Inventor Morse's Unfulfilled Ambition," "Margaret Fuller," closing in quite modern times with a chapter entitled "Whittier's Lost Love." The book is pleasantly written, the author showing a genuine affection for her subject, and great care has evidently been taken to make a final and authentic presentation of these stories, for reference as well as for their intrinsic interest. Published by L. C. Page & Co.

"Twentieth Century Manual of Railway and Commercial Telegraphy" is thoroughly illustrated with cuts and engravings, showing the technical parts of a telegraph instrument, also accurate drawings in black and white and in colors, the latter showing the regulation practical color signals used on blocks and on trains and engines. This feature of reproducing the color signals greatly enhances the value of the manual. In addition to these illustrations there are given full simple telegrams, train orders, railway messages and commercial and railway forms as they are actually used, as well as a glance that part of a message which goes over the wire, as distinguished from the printed portion. Published by Rand, McNally & Co.

In "Animals Before Man in North America," F. A. Lucas tells us about the extremely ancient animals that once peopled the land, treating the history by periods and describing the habits, appearance and relationships of the more conspicuous animals. Dr. Lucas is thoroughly acquainted with his subject and has written an entertainingly and interestingly of his life of a bygone age. Published by D. Appleton.

"A Quiver of Arrows," sermons of David Burrell, D. D., L. L. D., selected and compiled by F. A. Lucas, tells us about the extremely ancient animals that once peopled the land, treating the history by periods and describing the habits, appearance and relationships of the more conspicuous animals. Dr. Lucas is thoroughly acquainted with his subject and has written an entertainingly and interestingly of his life of a bygone age. Published by D. Appleton.

"The Thousand Eugeniads" is a novel by Mrs. Alfred Sedgwick in which she tells of her own adventures, coming as they do from impending poverty and a most disagreeable environment by a summons to Paris to meet a rich uncle whom she has never seen. Her experiences with M. and Mme. Varadin, a pair of continental adventurers, coming as they do with a big Briton, form the narrative, and the plot turns upon the tragic outcome of her uncle's gift to her of 1,000 shares in the Eugeniads mine. The story fills considerably more than half the book, is followed by

Advertisement for Hay's Hair-Health. Includes text: 'Hay's HAIR-HEALTH Keeps You Looking Young FREE', 'Test Its Hair Growing Powers', 'Don't Look Old', 'Stops Falling Hair', 'A Public Boon', 'Stains Nothing', 'No More Gray Hair', 'Guaranteed', 'No More Gray Hair', 'Free Bottle Offer', 'AMERICANS TIRE OF BOGOTA', 'HEWITT MAY YET RECOVER', 'KEEP THE DETAILS A SECRET', 'Leg Broken in Rowanway', 'Father Judge Explains', 'Marriage Licenses', 'Not So Dead as He Seemed', 'ASTHMA', 'NO OPPOSITION TO PLATT', 'New York Senator is Likely to Be Succeeded by Hissell', 'ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 15.—Candidates of both republican and democratic senators and assemblymen to nominate a successor to United States senator Thomas G. Platt will be held Monday evening, January 19. There is believed to be no doubt that the republicans will select Senator Platt to succeed himself.', 'The above books are for sale by the Megath Stationery Co., 268 Farnam St.', 'Remember the name, Don't, and take no substitute.'

LOCAL BREVITIES. Alexander Russell is in the city jail, charged with leaving horses unattended in the streets.

Forty new members were reported as having joined the Visiting Nurses association during the last month at yesterday afternoon's meeting.

There was considerable discussion of the annual birthday party to be held on February 21 or 22, Judge Woodcock having offered the use of his home on St. Mary's avenue for the reception.

It was decided at Wednesday afternoon's meeting of the Women's Christian Temperance Union to undertake a temperance revival in Omaha and vicinity.

Ten women have been appointed sanitary inspectors in New York at salaries of $1,200 a year. Eight colleges and universities are represented among the appointees.

California clubwomen have gone to work in earnest to secure a court for juvenile offenders. In San Francisco representatives of the federation have been going two weeks to the four police courts, taking notes of the number of children brought there for trial.

The women of the Illinois Federation have received encouragement in their crusade against the liquor traffic.

The annual meeting of the South Omaha cavalry troop was held at the troop clubbers Wednesday evening.

A third edition of Charles Sumner's "Addresses on War," with an introduction by Edwin D. Mead, is published by Ginn & Co.

"Whimlets" is a clever little book sent by Henry C. Coates & Co. The author is S. Scott Stenson.

"The Thousand Eugeniads" is a novel by Mrs. Alfred Sedgwick in which she tells of her own adventures, coming as they do from impending poverty and a most disagreeable environment by a summons to Paris to meet a rich uncle whom she has never seen.

"The Thousand Eugeniads" is a novel by Mrs. Alfred Sedgwick in which she tells of her own adventures, coming as they do from impending poverty and a most disagreeable environment by a summons