

MOROCCO AND ITS PEOPLE

Present Revolt of Fanaticism Against the Influences of Civilization.

FACTS ABOUT THE CHINA OF THE WEST

Causes and Cry of the Boxers Repeated by the Arabs—Characteristics of the Country and Its People.

Morocco has again vindicated its ancient title of the "China of the West." An insurrection has rent the Sultanate of Muley Abdul Aziz, which in origin is strikingly similar to the Boxer outbreak of 1900 in the Flowery Kingdom. In both cases, relates the New York Tribune, it has been a revolt of fanaticism against the civilization of the Christian. The Boxer cried, "Down with the Christian dog!" The Arab is repeating that same cry.

Evil to the Foundation.

According to travelers, the condition of Morocco at bottom is as evil today as in the time of Arabid, the first Sultan. The surface, as may be seen by foreigners, may present a little fairer view, but it is a varnish which the flame of insurrection is liable to shroud to dust.

Oil as Fuel.

Experiments have proven that oil is just as serviceable for fuel purposes as coal and is considerably cheaper. There are many people, however, who will always prefer the coal just as there are many people who take Hostetter's Stomach Bitters in preference to any other remedy, because they have tried it and know that it cures headache, flatulency, indigestion, dyspepsia, constipation and malaria, fever and ague.

Prattle of the Youngsters.

"Now, children, what is a cape? Well, George?" "If you please, ma'am, my ma buys a new one, an' when my pa sees the price he swores like a pirate."

A Sudden Twinge

Of pain is generally the first warning of an attack of rheumatism. It feels as if the disease were in the bones or muscles, but the real cause of rheumatism is found in impure blood. In order to cure rheumatism the blood must be cleansed of the poisonous impurities which are the cause of the disease.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has been very successful in the cure of rheumatism, because it entirely cleanses the blood from the poisonous substances which are the cause of the disease. It not only purifies the blood but by increasing the activity of the blood-making glands, it increases the supply of pure, rich blood which adds to the vigor of every physical organ.

Mr. A. McKnight

of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, writes: "I was afflicted with rheumatism for twelve years, and was nearly crippled. Tried many doctors and two of them gave me up to die. None of them did me much good. The pains in my back, hips and legs (at times) would not leave me. I was nearly blind. My appetite was very bad. My nerves were so bad that I could not sleep. I took five bottles of 'Pierce's' and today my health is good after suffering twelve years with rheumatism."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets

cleanse the bowels and stimulate the sluggish liver.

ONE SOLDIER'S CHRISTMAS

How Augustus Lockner Spent the Merry Holiday in 1864.

TRUE STORY OF FIGHT WITH MOSBY'S MEN

Capture and Escape from the Guerrillas and His Desperate Struggle for Life Against a Fierce Winter Storm.

OMAHA, Jan. 14.—To the Editor of The Bee: I noticed recently under the caption "A Brave Fight for Life," a story taken from the Chicago Inter Ocean, which evidently is a recital of my own experiences with Mosby's men during the civil war. Who the writer is, or how the Chicago paper secured the story, is unknown to me, but the story is full of errors and lacks detail, showing that the writer is not well posted or has forgotten the facts. The few friends who heard me tell the story years ago in Grand Army of the Republic hall at Columbus, Neb., can tell that, for as printed, it is an abbreviated recital of the facts as given by myself. This being the first time that I ever saw it in print I desire to have it appear correctly. Here is the story:

In December, 1864, only a large body of cavalry was gathered in the lower part of the Shenadoah valley, preparing to make a raid toward Gordonsville, Va. The raid resulted in no particular importance until our return. About one mile from the town of Warrenton I got into a bad scrape, an experience which will never be forgotten. I had gone to a well to fill my canteen and returning to my horse was preparing to return when two strangers, dressed in blue, with rubber ponchos which covered their shoulders, came to where I was standing. They held their revolvers under the ponchos in such a manner that I was unable to see them. My command at this time was about fifty rods distant, riding from us. One of the strangers said: "Come around the corner of the house quick, or we'll scatter your brains over this doorknob."

Found It No Joke.

I sought to determine whether or not it was a joke. While I was deliberating my revolver was jerked from my belt by one of the men, while the other took hold of my horse. Then I was rushed around the corner of the house out of sight. Here we all mounted and rode leisurely toward a small wood, my captors riding close to me. At this time a squad of our men was riding along the road, but was unable to realize my situation.

I was led a captive into the woods and was searched for any valuables which I might have had. One of my captors then started toward the town with me. On the way he said that his comrades had been mingling with our men in the town and on the road. From his conversation I was led to believe that they were Mosby's scouts, or spies. As we rode back into the town I saw plenty of Mosby's troopers, dressed in blue and gray clothes, though we saw none of them when our troops passed through the town. In front of the leader's headquarters I saw a number of prisoners who were surrounded by a crowd of people. These prisoners were compelled to exchange their good blue uniforms for the tattered garments which their captors had to offer. I did not escape, and was soon garbed in an old black overcoat and a pair of old boots. I was exceedingly grateful, as I was left in possession of my shirt. A crowd of ugly, drunken fellows treated us shamefully and threatened to take our lives. Later three of us were taken to the edge of the town, where a family named Grant had a house occupied by a family named Grant. For this reason he thought the drunken rabble from the town suddenly swooped down upon us flourishing revolvers and sabers in the air, some more reckless than the others, shooting at the prisoners.

Murder of a Prisoner.

I looked inquiringly at my captor, whose name was Powell, and asked if the prisoners were to be shot. He replied by drawing his revolver and in strong language informed me that they were not. He succeeded in stopping the rush of the drunken mob from riding over us. While he was seeking to protect us one of the pursuers shot a young prisoner from the Eighth New York cavalry in the back. He fell mortally wounded, expiring a short time afterward.

Powell's Career as a Spy.

We stopped at a farm house, where he seemed somewhat acquainted, and heartily ate of cornbread, bacon and corn coffee. After the meal he asked one of the young women to play upon the piano for him, which request was granted. We then resumed our journey, during which he became talkative and informed me that his father was a Baptist minister in Florida. At the commencement of the war Powell said he had run away from home, drifted to Richmond, made himself useful about headquarters, had engaged in secret work between that city and Washington, had been in Canada on duty for the cause, besides some serious situations in Baltimore, finally joining Mosby's band, where, he said, he could help relieve a Yankee paymaster of his greasy pockets in a white shirt, which he did by going to Washington and sprouting information presumably at Mrs. Surratt's residence. His conversation revealed to me that he was the most bitter secessionist I ever knew. When I interrupted him he said he would not hold out much longer he uttered a loud oath and said that his cause had 300,000 men enlisted and that we would have to walk over their dead bodies. He also said that if necessary they would kill the head of our government. This remark did not cause any particular impression on me at the time, as I considered it made during his rage. In the light of later developments he must have been in conspiracy with Wilkes Booth at that time.

Escape From Custody.

Darkness finally overcame us while we were enroute. We stopped at a farm house, had lunch, and then spread our blankets for the night, sleeping side by side. I noticed that he kept his pistol inside his coat bosom and also that the windows were not locked. I removed my boots, and with my saddle I made a headrest. Our overcoats served as coverings. I was never more awake in my life. My guard slept as though he desired me to go to sleep first, so I laid quiet and breathed heavy. About midnight I surmised that Powell was soundly sleeping. I raised myself slowly to a sitting posture, moving cautiously to determine if he would discover my motions. Taking my clothing, I reached the window and raised it cautiously. The moon shone between some clouds just at that moment and had Powell awakened I would have made an excellent target as I clambered through the window. Once outside I crept toward the woods.

Terrible Suffering Follows Escape.

While pondering over my situation four troopers hove in sight. They discovered me as quickly as I did them. I jumped over a rail fence and greeted them with a "Good morning." They smiled, then questioned me to ascertain if there were any Yankees around, and finally rode away. A snow storm had set in while I slumbered and it was cold, stiff and sore in every part of my body. I made for the Blue Ridge and its wooded shelter. Through the snow storm I traveled, while I saw an occasional preparation for merry Christmas celebration. I gradually grew weak and hungry. Seeing a large, well-lighted house, about midnight I surmised that the inmates were dancing, so I went to the residence. Seeking out the barn I found shelter there, and the only bed afforded me was a pile of chaff. When I awoke my boots were frozen solidly to my feet. It was nearly impossible for me to walk. Upon looking out I saw smoke arising from the chimney of one of the negroes' shanties. I had hoped for this. I approached it and tapped upon the door. It was opened by a big negro woman. With teeth chattering I pleaded for admittance and warmth. I sat before the big log fire on the hearth and actually burned those boots. I was closely questioned by the negroes, when I requested food, and with much doubt, was served with a scanty repast. She told me when she handed me the food to get out for the woods, as there were soldiers in the house. I obeyed.

Last Stage of the Journey.

About two hours later I met a mounted rebel officer in the woods. After searching me I was permitted to resume my journey. My feet, feverish and aching, made walking almost impossible. I was sick at heart and about to approach a house and throw myself upon the mercy of the occupants in my appeal for aid, when I looked down from the brow of a hill and saw Harper's Ferry, fluttering over Bolivar Heights. So near friends I was I was filled with new vigor, and once more buried myself in the security of the woods. Dizziness often overcame me, but I valiantly pushed forward. Darkness soon came with the twilight. Under the cover of it I continued in my flight, until about 10 o'clock, when I heard the long expected challenge of our picket out in Lewray valley. I was taken to the picket's tent, where my boots were cut from my feet. An ambulance from Harper's Ferry removed me to the hospital, where I was a patient for three months before my health returned and my feet were cured.

RELIGIOUS.

Rev. J. A. Zahn, the Catholic educator and author, says he never reads the books he writes.

Mrs. Marilla B. Ingalls, who went to Durban as a missionary in 1851, has just died at Durban.

Rev. B. J. Kelley, bishop of Savannah, has just celebrated the twenty-ninth year of his episcopacy in the cathedral of New York city.

Rev. Dr. Parkhurst's Madison Square church makes a million and a new site worth $200,000 by selling to an insurance company.

Dr. Theodore Cuyler, whose ministry has been exceptionally fruitful for these many years, never yet preached a sermon in defense of the scriptures.

Archbishop Benson, the predecessor of Archbishop Gibbons, died at the age of 87, leaving a daughter and three sons, who have gained distinction as writers.

A group of cotton manufacturers in the Carolinas are making arrangements for the Young Men's Christian association for the benefit of employees at their largest mill.

The Salvation Army is now at work in forty-nine countries, among people speaking thirty-one different languages, and at present has more than 7,000 organized societies.

Owing to the opposition in the congregation the Baptist temple of Philadelphia has abandoned its project to erect a tablet as a memorial to Miss Wauke Davis, daughter of Jefferson Davis.

In the church of the Faithful Fathers, New York City, the members of the church of 20 members. The one condition of membership is that the members shall first be communicants of the Catholic church.

ONE SOLDIER'S CHRISTMAS

How Augustus Lockner Spent the Merry Holiday in 1864.

TRUE STORY OF FIGHT WITH MOSBY'S MEN

Capture and Escape from the Guerrillas and His Desperate Struggle for Life Against a Fierce Winter Storm.

OMAHA, Jan. 14.—To the Editor of The Bee: I noticed recently under the caption "A Brave Fight for Life," a story taken from the Chicago Inter Ocean, which evidently is a recital of my own experiences with Mosby's men during the civil war. Who the writer is, or how the Chicago paper secured the story, is unknown to me, but the story is full of errors and lacks detail, showing that the writer is not well posted or has forgotten the facts. The few friends who heard me tell the story years ago in Grand Army of the Republic hall at Columbus, Neb., can tell that, for as printed, it is an abbreviated recital of the facts as given by myself. This being the first time that I ever saw it in print I desire to have it appear correctly. Here is the story:

In December, 1864, only a large body of cavalry was gathered in the lower part of the Shenadoah valley, preparing to make a raid toward Gordonsville, Va. The raid resulted in no particular importance until our return. About one mile from the town of Warrenton I got into a bad scrape, an experience which will never be forgotten. I had gone to a well to fill my canteen and returning to my horse was preparing to return when two strangers, dressed in blue, with rubber ponchos which covered their shoulders, came to where I was standing. They held their revolvers under the ponchos in such a manner that I was unable to see them. My command at this time was about fifty rods distant, riding from us. One of the strangers said: "Come around the corner of the house quick, or we'll scatter your brains over this doorknob."

Found It No Joke.

I sought to determine whether or not it was a joke. While I was deliberating my revolver was jerked from my belt by one of the men, while the other took hold of my horse. Then I was rushed around the corner of the house out of sight. Here we all mounted and rode leisurely toward a small wood, my captors riding close to me. At this time a squad of our men was riding along the road, but was unable to realize my situation.

I was led a captive into the woods and was searched for any valuables which I might have had. One of my captors then started toward the town with me. On the way he said that his comrades had been mingling with our men in the town and on the road. From his conversation I was led to believe that they were Mosby's scouts, or spies. As we rode back into the town I saw plenty of Mosby's troopers, dressed in blue and gray clothes, though we saw none of them when our troops passed through the town. In front of the leader's headquarters I saw a number of prisoners who were surrounded by a crowd of people. These prisoners were compelled to exchange their good blue uniforms for the tattered garments which their captors had to offer. I did not escape, and was soon garbed in an old black overcoat and a pair of old boots. I was exceedingly grateful, as I was left in possession of my shirt. A crowd of ugly, drunken fellows treated us shamefully and threatened to take our lives. Later three of us were taken to the edge of the town, where a family named Grant had a house occupied by a family named Grant. For this reason he thought the drunken rabble from the town suddenly swooped down upon us flourishing revolvers and sabers in the air, some more reckless than the others, shooting at the prisoners.

Murder of a Prisoner.

I looked inquiringly at my captor, whose name was Powell, and asked if the prisoners were to be shot. He replied by drawing his revolver and in strong language informed me that they were not. He succeeded in stopping the rush of the drunken mob from riding over us. While he was seeking to protect us one of the pursuers shot a young prisoner from the Eighth New York cavalry in the back. He fell mortally wounded, expiring a short time afterward.

Powell's Career as a Spy.

We stopped at a farm house, where he seemed somewhat acquainted, and heartily ate of cornbread, bacon and corn coffee. After the meal he asked one of the young women to play upon the piano for him, which request was granted. We then resumed our journey, during which he became talkative and informed me that his father was a Baptist minister in Florida. At the commencement of the war Powell said he had run away from home, drifted to Richmond, made himself useful about headquarters, had engaged in secret work between that city and Washington, had been in Canada on duty for the cause, besides some serious situations in Baltimore, finally joining Mosby's band, where, he said, he could help relieve a Yankee paymaster of his greasy pockets in a white shirt, which he did by going to Washington and sprouting information presumably at Mrs. Surratt's residence. His conversation revealed to me that he was the most bitter secessionist I ever knew. When I interrupted him he said he would not hold out much longer he uttered a loud oath and said that his cause had 300,000 men enlisted and that we would have to walk over their dead bodies. He also said that if necessary they would kill the head of our government. This remark did not cause any particular impression on me at the time, as I considered it made during his rage. In the light of later developments he must have been in conspiracy with Wilkes Booth at that time.

Escape From Custody.

Darkness finally overcame us while we were enroute. We stopped at a farm house, had lunch, and then spread our blankets for the night, sleeping side by side. I noticed that he kept his pistol inside his coat bosom and also that the windows were not locked. I removed my boots, and with my saddle I made a headrest. Our overcoats served as coverings. I was never more awake in my life. My guard slept as though he desired me to go to sleep first, so I laid quiet and breathed heavy. About midnight I surmised that Powell was soundly sleeping. I raised myself slowly to a sitting posture, moving cautiously to determine if he would discover my motions. Taking my clothing, I reached the window and raised it cautiously. The moon shone between some clouds just at that moment and had Powell awakened I would have made an excellent target as I clambered through the window. Once outside I crept toward the woods.

Terrible Suffering Follows Escape.

While pondering over my situation four troopers hove in sight. They discovered me as quickly as I did them. I jumped over a rail fence and greeted them with a "Good morning." They smiled, then questioned me to ascertain if there were any Yankees around, and finally rode away. A snow storm had set in while I slumbered and it was cold, stiff and sore in every part of my body. I made for the Blue Ridge and its wooded shelter. Through the snow storm I traveled, while I saw an occasional preparation for merry Christmas celebration. I gradually grew weak and hungry. Seeing a large, well-lighted house, about midnight I surmised that the inmates were dancing, so I went to the residence. Seeking out the barn I found shelter there, and the only bed afforded me was a pile of chaff. When I awoke my boots were frozen solidly to my feet. It was nearly impossible for me to walk. Upon looking out I saw smoke arising from the chimney of one of the negroes' shanties. I had hoped for this. I approached it and tapped upon the door. It was opened by a big negro woman. With teeth chattering I pleaded for admittance and warmth. I sat before the big log fire on the hearth and actually burned those boots. I was closely questioned by the negroes, when I requested food, and with much doubt, was served with a scanty repast. She told me when she handed me the food to get out for the woods, as there were soldiers in the house. I obeyed.

Last Stage of the Journey.

About two hours later I met a mounted rebel officer in the woods. After searching me I was permitted to resume my journey. My feet, feverish and aching, made walking almost impossible. I was sick at heart and about to approach a house and throw myself upon the mercy of the occupants in my appeal for aid, when I looked down from the brow of a hill and saw Harper's Ferry, fluttering over Bolivar Heights. So near friends I was I was filled with new vigor, and once more buried myself in the security of the woods. Dizziness often overcame me, but I valiantly pushed forward. Darkness soon came with the twilight. Under the cover of it I continued in my flight, until about 10 o'clock, when I heard the long expected challenge of our picket out in Lewray valley. I was taken to the picket's tent, where my boots were cut from my feet. An ambulance from Harper's Ferry removed me to the hospital, where I was a patient for three months before my health returned and my feet were cured.

RELIGIOUS.

Rev. J. A. Zahn, the Catholic educator and author, says he never reads the books he writes.

Mrs. Marilla B. Ingalls, who went to Durban as a missionary in 1851, has just died at Durban.

Rev. B. J. Kelley, bishop of Savannah, has just celebrated the twenty-ninth year of his episcopacy in the cathedral of New York city.

Rev. Dr. Parkhurst's Madison Square church makes a million and a new site worth $200,000 by selling to an insurance company.

Dr. Theodore Cuyler, whose ministry has been exceptionally fruitful for these many years, never yet preached a sermon in defense of the scriptures.

Archbishop Benson, the predecessor of Archbishop Gibbons, died at the age of 87, leaving a daughter and three sons, who have gained distinction as writers.

A group of cotton manufacturers in the Carolinas are making arrangements for the Young Men's Christian association for the benefit of employees at their largest mill.

The Salvation Army is now at work in forty-nine countries, among people speaking thirty-one different languages, and at present has more than 7,000 organized societies.

Owing to the opposition in the congregation the Baptist temple of Philadelphia has abandoned its project to erect a tablet as a memorial to Miss Wauke Davis, daughter of Jefferson Davis.

In the church of the Faithful Fathers, New York City, the members of the church of 20 members. The one condition of membership is that the members shall first be communicants of the Catholic church.

ONE SOLDIER'S CHRISTMAS

How Augustus Lockner Spent the Merry Holiday in 1864.

TRUE STORY OF FIGHT WITH MOSBY'S MEN

Capture and Escape from the Guerrillas and His Desperate Struggle for Life Against a Fierce Winter Storm.

OMAHA, Jan. 14.—To the Editor of The Bee: I noticed recently under the caption "A Brave Fight for Life," a story taken from the Chicago Inter Ocean, which evidently is a recital of my own experiences with Mosby's men during the civil war. Who the writer is, or how the Chicago paper secured the story, is unknown to me, but the story is full of errors and lacks detail, showing that the writer is not well posted or has forgotten the facts. The few friends who heard me tell the story years ago in Grand Army of the Republic hall at Columbus, Neb., can tell that, for as printed, it is an abbreviated recital of the facts as given by myself. This being the first time that I ever saw it in print I desire to have it appear correctly. Here is the story:

In December, 1864, only a large body of cavalry was gathered in the lower part of the Shenadoah valley, preparing to make a raid toward Gordonsville, Va. The raid resulted in no particular importance until our return. About one mile from the town of Warrenton I got into a bad scrape, an experience which will never be forgotten. I had gone to a well to fill my canteen and returning to my horse was preparing to return when two strangers, dressed in blue, with rubber ponchos which covered their shoulders, came to where I was standing. They held their revolvers under the ponchos in such a manner that I was unable to see them. My command at this time was about fifty rods distant, riding from us. One of the strangers said: "Come around the corner of the house quick, or we'll scatter your brains over this doorknob."

Found It No Joke.

I sought to determine whether or not it was a joke. While I was deliberating my revolver was jerked from my belt by one of the men, while the other took hold of my horse. Then I was rushed around the corner of the house out of sight. Here we all mounted and rode leisurely toward a small wood, my captors riding close to me. At this time a squad of our men was riding along the road, but was unable to realize my situation.

I was led a captive into the woods and was searched for any valuables which I might have had. One of my captors then started toward the town with me. On the way he said that his comrades had been mingling with our men in the town and on the road. From his conversation I was led to believe that they were Mosby's scouts, or spies. As we rode back into the town I saw plenty of Mosby's troopers, dressed in blue and gray clothes, though we saw none of them when our troops passed through the town. In front of the leader's headquarters I saw a number of prisoners who were surrounded by a crowd of people. These prisoners were compelled to exchange their good blue uniforms for the tattered garments which their captors had to offer. I did not escape, and was soon garbed in an old black overcoat and a pair of old boots. I was exceedingly grateful, as I was left in possession of my shirt. A crowd of ugly, drunken fellows treated us shamefully and threatened to take our lives. Later three of us were taken to the edge of the town, where a family named Grant had a house occupied by a family named Grant. For this reason he thought the drunken rabble from the town suddenly swooped down upon us flourishing revolvers and sabers in the air, some more reckless than the others, shooting at the prisoners.

Murder of a Prisoner.

I looked inquiringly at my captor, whose name was Powell, and asked if the prisoners were to be shot. He replied by drawing his revolver and in strong language informed me that they were not. He succeeded in stopping the rush of the drunken mob from riding over us. While he was seeking to protect us one of the pursuers shot a young prisoner from the Eighth New York cavalry in the back. He fell mortally wounded, expiring a short time afterward.

Powell's Career as a Spy.

We stopped at a farm house, where he seemed somewhat acquainted, and heartily ate of cornbread, bacon and corn coffee. After the meal he asked one of the young women to play upon the piano for him, which request was granted. We then resumed our journey, during which he became talkative and informed me that his father was a Baptist minister in Florida. At the commencement of the war Powell said he had run away from home, drifted to Richmond, made himself useful about headquarters, had engaged in secret work between that city and Washington, had been in Canada on duty for the cause, besides some serious situations in Baltimore, finally joining Mosby's band, where, he said, he could help relieve a Yankee paymaster of his greasy pockets in a white shirt, which he did by going to Washington and sprouting information presumably at Mrs. Surratt's residence. His conversation revealed to me that he was the most bitter secessionist I ever knew. When I interrupted him he said he would not hold out much longer he uttered a loud oath and said that his cause had 300,000 men enlisted and that we would have to walk over their dead bodies. He also said that if necessary they would kill the head of our government. This remark did not cause any particular impression on me at the time, as I considered it made during his rage. In the light of later developments he must have been in conspiracy with Wilkes Booth at that time.

Escape From Custody.

Darkness finally overcame us while we were enroute. We stopped at a farm house, had lunch, and then spread our blankets for the night, sleeping side by side. I noticed that he kept his pistol inside his coat bosom and also that the windows were not locked. I removed my boots, and with my saddle I made a headrest. Our overcoats served as coverings. I was never more awake in my life. My guard slept as though he desired me to go to sleep first, so I laid quiet and breathed heavy. About midnight I surmised that Powell was soundly sleeping. I raised myself slowly to a sitting posture, moving cautiously to determine if he would discover my motions. Taking my clothing, I reached the window and raised it cautiously. The moon shone between some clouds just at that moment and had Powell awakened I would have made an excellent target as I clambered through the window. Once outside I crept toward the woods.

Terrible Suffering Follows Escape.

While pondering over my situation four troopers hove in sight. They discovered me as quickly as I did them. I jumped over a rail fence and greeted them with a "Good morning." They smiled, then questioned me to ascertain if there were any Yankees around, and finally rode away. A snow storm had set in while I slumbered and it was cold, stiff and sore in every part of my body. I made for the Blue Ridge and its wooded shelter. Through the snow storm I traveled, while I saw an occasional preparation for merry Christmas celebration. I gradually grew weak and hungry. Seeing a large, well-lighted house, about midnight I surmised that the inmates were dancing, so I went to the residence. Seeking out the barn I found shelter there, and the only bed afforded me was a pile of chaff. When I awoke my boots were frozen solidly to my feet. It was nearly impossible for me to walk. Upon looking out I saw smoke arising from the chimney of one of the negroes' shanties. I had hoped for this. I approached it and tapped upon the door. It was opened by a big negro woman. With teeth chattering I pleaded for admittance and warmth. I sat before the big log fire on the hearth and actually burned those boots. I was closely questioned by the negroes, when I requested food, and with much doubt, was served with a scanty repast. She told me when she handed me the food to get out for the woods, as there were soldiers in the house. I obeyed.

Last Stage of the Journey.

About two hours later I met a mounted rebel officer in the woods. After searching me I was permitted to resume my journey. My feet, feverish and aching, made walking almost impossible. I was sick at heart and about to approach a house and throw myself upon the mercy of the occupants in my appeal for aid, when I looked down from the brow of a hill and saw Harper's Ferry, fluttering over Bolivar Heights. So near friends I was I was filled with new vigor, and once more buried myself in the security of the woods. Dizziness often overcame me, but I valiantly pushed forward. Darkness soon came with the twilight. Under the cover of it I continued in my flight, until about 10 o'clock, when I heard the long expected challenge of our picket out in Lewray valley. I was taken to the picket's tent, where my boots were cut from my feet. An ambulance from Harper's Ferry removed me to the hospital, where I was a patient for three months before my health returned and my feet were cured.

RELIGIOUS.

Rev. J. A. Zahn, the Catholic educator and author, says he never reads the books he writes.

Mrs. Marilla B. Ingalls, who went to Durban as a missionary in 1851, has just died at Durban.

Rev. B. J. Kelley, bishop of Savannah, has just celebrated the twenty-ninth year of his episcopacy in the cathedral of New York city.

Rev. Dr. Parkhurst's Madison Square church makes a million and a new site worth $200,000 by selling to an insurance company.

Dr. Theodore Cuyler, whose ministry has been exceptionally fruitful for these many years, never yet preached a sermon in defense of the scriptures.

Archbishop Benson, the predecessor of Archbishop Gibbons, died at the age of 87, leaving a daughter and three sons, who have gained distinction as writers.

A group of cotton manufacturers in the Carolinas are making arrangements for the Young Men's Christian association for the benefit of employees at their largest mill.

The Salvation Army is now at work in forty-nine countries, among people speaking thirty-one different languages, and at present has more than 7,000 organized societies.

Owing to the opposition in the congregation the Baptist temple of Philadelphia has abandoned its project to erect a tablet as a memorial to Miss Wauke Davis, daughter of Jefferson Davis.

In the church of the Faithful Fathers, New York City, the members of the church of 20 members. The one condition of membership is that the members shall first be communicants of the Catholic church.

Schmoller & Mueller, OMAHA'S LEADING PIANO HOUSE. LARGEST STOCK. GREATEST VARIETY. Our Pre-Inventory Sale. THE PIANOLA. Money Saving Piano Chances. Why deprive your family of the pleasure and education of a Piano when you can get your choice of 30 different makes at such ridiculously low prices as we shall make during this sale, on popular easy payment plan!

SCHMOLLER & MUELLER. MANUFACTURERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL PIANO DEALERS. Office and Warerooms, 1313 Farnam St. OMAHA. Factory and Warehouse 1316 Farnam St. OMAHA. IOWA WAREROOMS—502 BROADWAY, COUNCIL BLUFFS.

Alvine Poison the Cause of Appendicitis. Nothing can remove Alvine Poison, but Shradler's Laxative Fig Powder. Sold in 25 cent boxes at druggists. Manufactured by W. J. Shradler Medicine Co., Omaha and New York.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD. MARDI GRAS NEW ORLEANS, LA. February 17th to 24th. One Fare for Round Trip. Long limit returning. Stopovers allowed enroute. Ask for full particulars and copy of illustrated booklet, "NEW ORLEANS FOR THE TOURIST," at 1409 Farnam St., Omaha, or address W. H. BRILL, Dist. Pass. Agent, Ill. Cent. R. R., Omaha.

Some Nice Rooms for Ten Dollars Per Month. THE BEE BUILDING. R. C. PETERS & CO. RENTAL AGENTS. GROUND FLOOR. BEE BLDG.

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, SORE THROAT AND HOARSENESS—TAKE HOWELL'S ANTI-KAWF. Ask your druggist or send 25 cents to Howell Drug Co., Omaha, Neb.

DR. MCGREW SPECIALIST. Treats all forms of DISEASES AND DISORDERS OF MEN ONLY. 27 Year Experience, 17 Years in Omaha. His remarkable success has never been equaled and every day brings many reports of the good he is doing, or the relief he has given. Hot Springs Treatment for Syphilis. BLOOD DISEASE. VARICOCELE. LUMBAGO. NEURALGIA. GOUT. RHEUMATISM. MIGRAINE. DR. MCGREW'S CURE FOR ALL THESE AFFECTIONS. GUARANTEED TO CURE OR REFUND MONEY. 1000 N. 10th St., Omaha, Neb.

The Bee Want Ads Produce Results.