Sink Into the Earth. The central business portion of the town of Norway, Mich., is sinking into the earth, and the moment is near when the largest buildings of the town will probably be engulfed and the town divided by a carrying | yawning pit.

The Aragon mine is beneath the menaced district, and all who enter the structures do so at the risk of their lives. It has been known for some time that the site of the Nelson block, the largest in town, has been sinking, and now the structure may collapse at any moment. The postoffice and city hall are also sinking. Most of the other doomed buildings are owned by the Aragon Mining company. Merchants are at a loss to find new quarters, and their stocks are liable to sudden destruction. Postoffice Inspector Means has recommended removal of the office. New buildings are planned for the south side of
