"In the twenty-five years the constitutional efforts to ameliorate the condition of Ireland have been in progress we have accomplished more for Ireland than previous centuries of physical force effort which preceded it. When the agitation along peaceable lines first began the Irishman was little better than a serf. He had no vote except as his landlord willed it. Open voting was in vogue and in case the tenant was permitted to vote he had to do so viva voce, when his landlord or the position to instructions he would be evicted, and from that order he could make no appeal, for at that time the landlord could dispossess any tenant regardless of whether he paid his rent. And every improvement upon the land became the absolute property of the landlord as soon as the eviction took place.

"The constitutional party made its first success when it secured the secret ballot, a result of this being that eighty-five members of Parliament were returned to secure further concessions from the government. Then came the law permitting free sale, by which the tenant could dispose of his leasehold and its improvements without consulting the landlord. We have secured what is practically manhood suffrage; have secured the abolition of the grand juries, which were a constant menace to the people, because they had absolute power over all questions of the expenditure of public funds and were not in the last five years $50,000 and it has not elected, but chosen by the government and the landlords. Today we have county, district and parish councils. Some of the noblest lords of Ireland have recently been defeated for places on these boards by tenant farmers, and Lord Dunraven was recently elected by but a few votes over one of his tenants, and another of the not going to rise in open rebellion, for we in the passage of the are not able to do it, and in place of imvictories present land law under which 7,000 former tenants have become owners of the land which they formerly rented, their holdings averaging between thirty and forty acres each.

In addition to advancing a large amount of money to the tenants on long-time loans at 3 per cent interest for the purchase of the land the government appropriates the sum of $60,000,000, which is a donation outright, to be used in paying the landlords the difference between the price at which they hold the land and the price which the tenant is able to pay. The purchase of this land is made upon the basis of the annual rental, and it requires a sum ranging from the rent of from seventeen to twenty years to purchase outright. The tenant then has about sixty years in which to repay the loan to the government recently announced that of the 7.000 tenants who have purchased under the old land act but two have failed to keep up their annual payments.
