Thousands of people stood on the Broad way embankment today and looking across yards of the Southern railroad to these houses, asked each other if they had not been transformed into sepulchers. None could be found who said they had escaped from them and none knew of occupants had. Possibly they may have got away in safety, but there is grave fear that when all the living have been transferred to land the boats will bear bodies of dead from the flooded cottages and desolated section of the city.

In the turmoil of this calamity it has been practically impossible to authenticate death reports, but from apparently reliable sources it is gathered that eleven persons were drowned last night, four of whom perished on the north side early in the evening.

Streets Turned to Wharves. At the intersecting streets of Broadway; which temporarily became boat landings, similar scenes of grief were being enacted as refugees were brought to land. Scows were launched as fast as they could be constructed and volunteers started on rescumissions. A company of naval reserves from Alton, which had rowed down to the city yesterday in a cutter, rendered spiendid service. Rescuers began work as soon as it was light enough to see and continued their work far into tonight. The St. Louis fire department at once tendered their hose and coal wagons and the boats were gathered up throughout the city and from along the river front and hauled by running horses to the desolated city across the river. Volunteer carsmen promptly manned every boat furnished and

We must have food. East St. Louis is a cut off from sources of supply and what it has, has been largely drawn upon during the past week. Large amounts of food were destroyed by the water last night and we are in need of additional food to care for these sufferers. The viaduct is unsafe and wagons cannot cross to St. Louis. Railroad traffic is cut off and the situation confronting us is growing grave. Food must be secured in some manner or people already in distress will suffer even more.

Passing along the streets reporters were Passing along the streets reporters were assailed from all sides by anxious inquiries as to the stage of the river. Almost every citizen had fixed on some river mark and watched it carefully throughout the day, and it was the unanimous opinion that the flood was rising. With unflagging energy Mayor Cook, who has passed through flood exigencies at Shawneetown, where he formerly lived. and knows how to deal with high water, urged the laborers to work on the temporary levees in the fear that an hour's rise during the night might further inundate the city.

As the night drew on another fear confronted the inhabitants. The water that had steadily been pouring through the roadway embankment in heavy streams was undermining that bulwark and it was generally acknowledged that the street could not restrain the heavy pressure from its south side for many hours longer with the scepage water eating away at the interior. Hundreds of men expressed firm conviction that morning will find the street sunk and the water flooding much of that section of the city occupied by the mer cantile houses.

River Still Rising.

The belief held that the river was rising was confirmed by the St. Louis government guage at 7 tonight. The gauge reglatered 37.96 feet, a rise of .15 of a foot dur ing the past twenty-four hours. No attempt is made to explain this rise other than that the wind is forcing water from lowlands into the channels of the Mississippl and Missouri rivers which swells the SEES torrent at St. Louis.

Denverside, a suburb of East St. Louis. was completely inundated, and Alta Sita, farther to the east, was half flooded last night. If the river rises even a fraction more the water must swamp Alta Sita. From the ordinary course of the Mississippi to the Illinois bluffs is from five to foot of the bluffs.

As soon as news of the inundation spread through St. Louis the whole city became excited. Rumore of deaths started thousands of sightseers across Eads bridge to view the calamity. But the authorities in East St. Louis were prepared to meet just such a host of curious people. Beyond the eastern approach to Eads bridge is a strip of street half a mile long, leading to the viaduct over what ordinarily is Cahokia creek. This viaduct is the entrance into East St. Louis and across it entrance ropes were early stretched by police officers who stood behind them under orders to allow no egress into the city of those who would only hinder the work of rescue. At the East St. Louis end of the viaduct similar prohibitive measures had been taken. East St. Louis was practically shut off from the world. Even refugees with babes in arms and bundles of belongings, who desired to proceed to St. Louis, were stopped and questioned as to their destination in the Missouri city and until they could demonstrate that they were sure of being taken care of by friends they were turned back to the relief offered by the city. Tin stars were hurriedly made and fastened to pine for attachment by the local authorities, and reporters and citizens generally who volunteered to render every assistance possible, and that meant practically every able-bodied man, was furnished with these badges and could freely After that no furniture was transported. pass the lines of guarding police stationed throughout the city.

Cameras Are Barred Out.

Newspaper photographers and persons with cameras were dealt with unceremoniously. One newspaper photographer who had been warned not to take a picture of the flood, but who persisted, was knocked down and his camera broken. He was told that unless he departed he and his camera would be thrown into the water. He departed.

THE REPORT OF THE PARTY OF THE

Witness Describes Marcum's Death in Kentucky Fend Murder.

REMAINS SILENT THROUGH FEAR OF LIFE

Court is Told Ewen Saw All, but Re frained from Talking to Save Himself from Friend's Fate.

JACKSON, Ky., June 16 .- In the Marcum murder trial today Attorney Gnall for the defense moved to set aside the entire jury panel as irregular. Judge Redwine over ruled the motion. Commonwealth Attorney Byrd in outlin ing the case said he would prove that White and Jett entered into a conspiracy to kill Marcum and that Jett fired the shots, having been seen by a witness whon he would produce.

B. J. Ewen, the first witness, testified to standing beside Marcum when he was shot Just before the shooting Tom White passed by and Marcum said: "I'm afraid of that fellow; he means to do me harm." An instant later witness heard a pistol crack. Marcum, who had his arm on witness shoulder, released his hold and dropped to the floor exclaiming: "Oh, Lord they have killed me."

Witness looked back and saw Curtis Jet with pistol gripped in both hands. "I then fied," witness continued, "as thought that it was I who he was after when a second shot was fired."

Fear Keeps Witness Silent. On redirect examination be said fear for his own safety prevented him allowing Callahan and Hargis to know what he had seen. This statement from a deputy sheriff of the county, who has lived a prisoner in his home through fear and been under military guard when awake or asleep for several weeks, produced a visible impression in the court room. Ewen told of making a search of the courthouse shortly after the assassination and finding no one. He had seen the assassin, but dared not say so, Attorney J. C. Bache, the next witness, said he saw White come out of the courthouse as described by Ewen and saw Ewen Newly Elected Officers and Session look back when the first shot was fired. Attorney John Patrick said five minutes before the assassination he saw Jett and White conversing in front of the courthouse. He saw Jett go into the courthouse several minutes before the shoot ing. A moment after Marcum fell he saw Mrs. Marcum Johnson, Marcum's sister. He was corroborated by Kelly Kash, who occupied the same law office.

Says Jett Admitted Deed.

Tonight Mrs. Mary Johnson, sister of the murdered attorney, made a startling statement. In his address this morning Mr. Byrd said it would be proved that Jett admitted to Mrs. Johnson that he killed Macrum. In the evidence this afternoon he said Jett and White were talking to Mrs. Johnson at the bridge. Mrs. Johnson tonight confirms what Byrd said would be her testimony, adding that she feared to tell this earlier, believing she would be assassinated.

tended that the house had the right to demand an opportunity for pronjudgment on this important fiscal question. There was enormous exaggeration in the statement that it was foolish for England to maintain a policy differing from that of the rest of the world. While the United States and Germany were prosperous under protection, Great Britain's foreign exports were equal to the combined exports of the United States, Germany and France, which considering the enormous expansion of the population of the United States, was a truly surprising state of affairs.

The speaker denied that protectionist countries were cutting Great Britain out of the markets of the world. Germany had not even hurt Great Britain's market in South America, and when one considered the great natural advantages of the United States, its size and highly cultivated population. Asquith Twits Chamberlain.

H. H. Asquith, advanced liberal, who followed, declared that the reason for the abandenment of the grain tax remained an unsolved and inscrutable mystery. Mr. Chamberlain had told the public that the tax did not fall on the consumer. If that were so its repeal was a "magnificent display of international attachment," as it practically meant Great Britain was making a present to the United States of the $12,500,000 which the tax brought in. All the opposition's arguments against the tax were employed by Mr. Ritchie yesterday evening to justify the repeal. Never had a small minority been so rapidly and completely justified. Describing the situation as politically indecent. Mr. Asquith urged an explicit declaration of the collective judgment of the cabinet in regard to the large questions of fiscal policy, and, turning to Mr. Chamberlain, who at that moment entered the house and took his seat beside Mr. Balfour, Mr. Asquith asked what was his position in view of yesterday's speech of the chancellor of the exchequer, Mr. Ritchie. Was burning, a backslider brought home again by that gentleman's persuasive influence; Was the word requiescat or the word resurgam to be carved on the tombstone of the grain tax?
