CORN CROP RUINED and market cor

CORN CROP RUINED and market cortered. The greatest opportunity everknewn for the making or a fortune, from a comparatively small investment, is now presented by the corn market. The corn situation is unprecedented. Those who will take immediate advantage of present opportunity will certainly realize shormous profit. Acting on our advice, our clients have, in the past, realized thousands from investments of hundreds. Our advice today is buy corn now. Not saiy does the speculative situation demand a much higner price for corn, but all ratural factors, crop conditions, supply and uemand, export trade, etc., have assumed a character so bulish as to render 1 decisive advance in price practically investable. The corn crop of 1803, originally large in quality, was aimost entirely ruined because the inclement weather forced farmers to leave it in the fields all winter before harvesting. This year's crop is reiled upon to supply, not only the enormousity increasing annual demand for domestic and foreign consumption, but also an accumulated shortage resulting from three years of short crops. Now the present crop is practically ruined on each crop is practically ruined and excessilve railfail throughout the greatest coinproducing states has finally resulted in disastrous floods. The continued and excessilve railfail throughout the greatest coinproducing states has finally resulted in disastrous floods which have laid waste thousands of miles of land planted with corn. This makes, what seemed a probability of a short crop for 1903, a certainty, and, can have but one result, a big boom in the price of corn. In addition to the above is the fact that corn is practically cornered by the large elevator Interests of Chicago, and the combination of builish circumstances will certainly result in a sensational advance in price during the next few weeks. We are corn specialists, and, as such are in constant touch with the market and at all times familiar with its dominant factors. We are provized
