The council has had a big row and long litigation every year since the actual valuation plan went into effect in Lincoln with these three companies, and some of these suits are still pending in court. Governor Bailey is quoted as having said that outside aid was imperative, and a general call may follow. Both Omaha and Lincoln have made generous donations, and the sentiment seems to be that so long as there is any need for payment of supplies, food and clothing, aid should be supplied. It is likely, however, that the plan losses will not be popular in Nebraska.

WHAT A BLIND MAN CAN SEE

William H. Gregg Writes a Very Interesting and Instructive Book.

EYES NOT ALL ESSENTIAL TO HAPPINESS

Sorely Afflicted Man Points Out How Much of Brightness Life May Hold if the Heart Be Right.

William H. Gregg, a graduate of the Nebraska Institute for the Blind, has written a book entitled "Secrets of Fate Unlocked, or From Possibility to Reality," which he affectionately dedicates to his deceased wife. Mr. Gregg was born in Winona county, Minnesota, in September, 1867, and without sight. As a child he was a great lover of nature, and though deprived of that faculty which to those who see seems hours were passed in the woods, for he bly salon, and on the opposite side of the could hear the birds sing and enjoy the air. His parents thought it simply a sprain and treated it by bathing, etc., as is usual in those cases, but the effects were permanent and he has also from that time been partially disabled in this way.

Not a Book of Sermons. In February, 1898, Mr. Gregg delivered an address before the Lincoln High school for which he received the heartlest endorsement and highest praise from instructors, parents and students. Instructors and parents appreciating the influence his helpful thoughts and suggestions would have over the students, and the students inspired and spurred to a more determined effort by a knowledge of what he, though blind, had accomplished, resolved to strike the word "can't" from their vocabularies, One must not get the idea that the book sermonizes, on the contrary, it is entertaining as it is helpful. Speaking of the peculiar conception the blind has of, even to those who see, the most common things Among these are the Consumers' league. Mr. Gregg says his first idea of the sun was that it must be a very large lamp hung in the sky, though it puzzled him to imagine what held it up. His mind Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen of libraries and museums, legislation for pure the sun, moon and stars that he dreamed was so wrought up when he was told of food and other things equally vital to the of them. As another instance he says well-being of the people. In fact, there that when he first heard of corn fodder he supposed it was something that would bite. His description of the surprising feats of locomotion accomplished by the totally blind is truly wonderful.

His Life in Nebraska. In 1874, the mother having died a few bors were strewn with flowers. It was of the city held at the Second Presbyterian family to Pleasant Hill, Neb. The coming to a prairie country, after having always been accustomed to a wooded one, was quite a novelty and a great change even to the responsibility of the flower garden on this sightless lad. From then to the presthe lot next to the public library, started out time Mr. Gregg has spent a large porknown in the leading towns of the state. He entered the Nebraska State Institution for the Blind at Nebraska City November Christian Temperance union $50 was voted 21, 1877, and was graduated with the class of 1886. This was the first class to be graduated from the institution and the class motto was "From Possibility to Reality." One has only to read his book to discover with what perfection he has attained the fullest realization of this motto.

Mr. Gregg has traveled much, and the reader has the benefit of his experiences, together with the descriptions of the diffeernt portions of the country, the manners and customs of the people, etc. Under the title, "What I Saw in Wind Cave," he describes a visit made to Wind Cave, in the Black Hills, and by his word picture one is almost made to see the wierd beauties of its interior. In a chapter, "Let Not Your Heart Be Troubled," we find the following words of encouragement: "The dove in its flight finds but one obstruction to its progress-the resistance of the atmosphere. It might be said that if the atmsophere were removed she could fly more rapidly. But remove the atmosphere and her wings will pe useless. Some one may say, I am so hampered: were it not for the obstacles in my way I could accomplish more.' He gnows not that these very obstacles are essential to conquest and that they generate strength to achieve it."

Contents of the Book The book also contains chapters on "Hints on Education," "Education of the Blind." "Character Building," "Concerning Helen Keller" and "The Pinnacle of Fame," also an instructive chapter on "The Education of the Deaf." In his ramblings Mr. Gregg has often been asked many questions regarding those who have lost one or more of the faculties, and he has taken these questions and his answers and out of them woven a very instructive chapter for those who love to consider the causes, whys and wherefores. Another feature of the book that deserves especial mention is a sermon by Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage, the text for which was taken from Isaiah 33:23, "The lame take the prey." In this sermon the afflicted are offered consolation and comfort, and every one is reminded of a responsibility to make good use of whatever talent they may possess.

Mr. Gregg is very much in earnest in his desire to help others and every page of his book breathes a spirit of resignation to the Divine will. He says: "Though I am unfortunate in the world, and notwithstanding that it is darkness to me, yet I, with many of my unfortunate brothers and sisters, look forward to a better land than this, where there are no such obstacles to ncounter, where we will stand on an quality. There we, too, shall see the gifttering streets and the bright shining lights of the New Jerusalem. There we will behold the radiant brightness of our Creator and enjoy His presence during the ceaseless years of eternity."
