It is to the effect that when Governor Savage granted the respite from April 25 of last year until July 10 of this year, he did not stop there, but imposed upon the prisoner a punishment had supplanted him in the woman's affecin that he sentenced him to hard labor. When a man is sentenced to be hung the courts do not impose hard labor, and inasmuch as the governor did that in this instance, Judge Hamer contends that it operated as a commutation and nullified the provision for the hanging. Such commutation, said Judge Hamer, is within the lawful power of the governor.
