TO FORCE LAWYERS' TICKET Plan to Have Delegates to Democratic Convention Named by Committee.

TO IGNORE RANK AND FILE OF PARTY Some Democrats Insist Upon More Than One Place for the Party on the Judicial Ticket This Fall.

Democrats and populists who are inclined to follow the lead of the democratic party are expressing indignation over a discovery which they claim to have made in regard to the plans of certain democratic attorneys to force upon the party the nominees these lawyers named two weeks ago for judges of the district court.

Ed P. Smith, chairman of the judicial committee, is now out of town, and will not return until the first week in August, so the people who claim to be "in the know" expect no call for a convention until after his return.

Question of Form. This plan will not have the unequalled support of the people whom the democrats hope to honor with a "nonpartisan" nomination, for the reason that while some of the republicans on the lawyers' slate were not nominated by the party ticket, the democrats party would be tantamount to destruction of the "nonpartisan" feature of the nominations and practically a democratic nomination, which the republicans on the lawyers' slate could not accept.
