Ferval, the novelist, whose book, entitled "The Other Love," was recently crowned by the French academy, has at last been revealed. Behind the masculine signature and virile style is the charming personality of the Baroness de Fribourg, the most feminine of women. The Baroness de Fribourg's elegant home at the very head of the Avenue Bols de Boulogne, near the Arc de Triomphe, is frequented by the most distinguished men and women of the day. Rostand, Marcel, Prevost, Paul Hervieu, Mme, Paul de St. Victor and other celebrities are to be met in her salon. The contrasts of her life are perhaps accountable for the somewhat singular trend of the baronesa' mentality. Educated in a convent, where the spiritual life made fluence of such sights is assessed at a figa deep impression on her youthful imagina ure calculated to discourage youthful imtion, she became the bride of a soldier, and wa sthrown into the gayetles of the world among many different people. Of an extremely artistic temperament, she first came to the notice of the Parisians as a painter of portraits, several of which were exhibited at the salon. It was accident which showed her the true bent of her genius. Her daughter, of whom she was passionately fond, married and left her. It was to case her suffering that the baroness attempted in "The Other Love" to depict the maternal yearning and the emptiness of her life. The book, issued under the pseudonym of "Claude Ferval," caused a sensation. The baroness then took to writing as a career Her second novel, "Le Plus Fort" (The Strongest), is just out. ### Disastrous to Sever Relations.

My government would be very unwilling to believe that any but the best relations exist between it and the United States. Of course the worst may come and relations be broken off, but I do not think so. I am hoping all the other way. Patience is necessary in international affairs. My sovereign has promised what you have asked, or the most of your requests, and he will certainly carry out his promises.
