with a Club. NEW YORK, Sept. 26 - Frederick Adrian Verdu, who died early today from wounds inflicted by an unknown person wide he was watching a house in Fifty-eighth street, is said to have been at the time a paymaster in the navy and was until recently in the employ of a submarine boat company as consulting engineer. Verdu has been known to many person but little knowledge was possessed by them as to his career. It is said he re-entered the navy during the war with Spain and was in the battle of Manila bay with Admiral Dewey. The police took charge of a man known as Joseph Hanson, who was found near the scene of the murderous attack. His hat was missing and he showed signs of having been engaged in an encounter. Papers in his pockets indicated, according to the police, that Verdu had been doing detective work and that he and Hanson had been working together, shadowing a woman near the scene for several days. A servant girl is the only person found so far who witnessed the assault. She says Verdu and Hanson were walking together when two men approached Verdu was struck down, while Hanson escaped. Later, at the station, she picked Hanson from among nine men as the person "who struck the man with a club. Later she is said to have asserted that Hanson struck the blow which felled

It is said that Mrs. Verdu is the daughter of a wealthy family. With her husband she occupied apartments in Brooklyn, from which she was surromned to the hospital.
