I may be wrong about it, but I have the impression that there is too much striving in our schools to influence the children to do what they do not want to do. We say the child is backward in this or that study and we hold him down to it, restraining him in his inclinations, and possibly as a conclusion of the whole matter educate him in the belief that he is stupid. I think it would be well for the schools to follow the lines of least resistance. Instead of pressing the child on lines that are distanteful, I should say that he be given free rein on the lines of natural selection.

to the cause to be advanced. Power over others makes governments great, work-men captains of industry, leadership in business, distinction and fullness to life business, distinction and fullness to life of men.

The power over self is the third type of a satisfactory education. The disciplined life is the life of full service. The disciplined life is the life of full service. The disciplined life is the life of full service. The disciplined life is the useful judgment, the disciplined hand is the skilfull hand. Courses of study, formal steps in methods, philosophies of culture are agencies to attain ends, they are not the ends themselves. They are means to ends, the realities and powers of a genuine life.

Teaching is only a large business in proportion as it seeks the betterment of mankind. Its province is easily overestimated, its field of activity is only the reasonable and the possible. It remains for the teacher to dignify the business, it cannot do it itself. Teaching cannot confer these powers, it only gives encouragement, advice, sympathy, direction. Schools cannot give talent, bestow gifts, guarantee characters, as they are only opportunities and privileges.

The expectation that this year's meeting of the Southwestern Iowa Teachers' association would prove a record-breaker in point of attendance was realized when the enrollment yesterday morning approached close to the 800 mark, a figure far ahead of any previous annual meeting of the association.

The routine work began yesterday morning with the conference meetings, which were held in the different class rooms at the high school. Much interest was displayed in these round table or conference sections and all were well attended. State

But there are greater things than these formal elements, much lauded and oversatimated. The greatest things in this world are not methods, but men; the largest service is not mechanism and plan, but spirit. The greatest result in the progress of education is not scholarship, or accomplishments and culture, but real life, or a great character, of a great spirit that accepts the divine commission and teaches the gospel of true knowledge and great living.

The whole trend of democratic literature and of democratic speeches as well as democratic party has ever made on the optoactive tariff not only breeds but shelters trusts. The only criticism that the democratic party has ever made on the protective tariff is that it breeds and shelters trusts. Certainly no one who thus believes can be in favor of a protective tariff. Therefore, I commend the honesty of the democratic candidate for governor head, but it is thought that he will now recover.

We are now within twelve months of another national campaign and with no present indication of an issue. Our friends are groping in the dark. The candidate for governor in no other state dare express himself on the money question. The democratic nomines for governor in no state dare say whether he is in favor of free silver or in favor of the gold standard; whether he is a bimetallist or a monometallist; whether he is a Bryan democrat or a Cieveland democrat. And the democratic candidate for governor in no state except lows dare define himself on the tariff question.

As usual there are no state issues involved in this campaign. I congratulate Governor Cummins and the people of the state upon the record made by him and the prosperity enjoyed by them during the last two years. Na maifeasance in office has existed anywhere no interests have been neglected; no partiality shown and no criticism from any source has been offered.
