The conference of representatives of the different German states which is sitting in Berlin to consider the financial condition of the empire, has some knotty problems to solve.

It is to be expected that the amount of the individual states to the imperial treasury in the financial program sketched by Prince Bismarck in 1871 was calculated that the revenue which the imperial treasury would derive from customs and excise duties would enable it to balance the amount of the contributions...

FRITZ HEINZE AS A STRENUOUS FIGHTER

Old-Timers and Wealthy Syndicates Sorely Harassed by a Bold Fighter—Millions Won and More to Come.

Fritz August Heinze, one of the impelling forces of the shutdown of mines in Butte and vicinity, is a native of Butte, N. Y., 34 years of age, a graduate of Columbia, an expert in mineralogy and a practical miner.

When Heinze went to Butte thirteen years ago the city was a mining camp where there were some of the richest veins of copper in the country. He took his $5 a day job and went down every morning at 7 and stayed until 6 in the evening.

He had a smattering of engineering knowledge and he worked faithfully in the mines for two years. In that time he learned much about copper. He mastered the smelting business and his shrewd mind saw the opportunities that gave him his start toward fortune.

He asked his brothers to go to Montana with him. Arthur, who is a lawyer, decided to go. Otto, who was a business man at that time, refused. The two brothers established themselves in Butte. The need for the lawyer brother was soon apparent.

Heinze was in litigation up to his neck within a year. He lent the Estrella claim from James A. Murray and built a small smelter with his capital. The contract with Murray provided that Heinze should pay a 25 per cent royalty on all ore running over 12 per cent copper to the ton.

Heinze turned the property, which is worth $10,000, over to Heinze. The Amalgamated Copper company is owned by the Standard Oil company, the richest and most powerful trust in the world.

When Heinze returned to Butte, in the latter part of 1897, he was dragged into the sensational litigation that is now in process of adjudication.

This is but an instance of his work. He brought suit after suit in similar conditions. Butte mountain is covered with valid and crime-crossed claims, owned by various interests. Heinze knew about them all, and he made good use of his knowledge in fighting his enemies.

Two weeks ago Judge William Clancy, sitting in Butte, granted injunctions against the Boston & Montana Mining company and the Parrot Mining company to prevent the paying of dividends to the Amalgamated Copper company, and in effect made the Amalgamated Copper company practically an outlaw and had no rights in Montana.
