Pelicemen en the Carpet Charged with Drinking While on Duty.

BOARD ARRIVES AT QUEER CONCLUSIONS

Two Who Are Proven Guilty Are Reprimanded and One Not Proven Guilty is Dropped from the Force.

The meeting of the Fire and Police board lest night was a very tame affair, as compared to the expectations. In anticipation of a general shaking up of dry bones, the uncil chamber, where the meeting was held, was crowded to the doors. It had been given out that a number of patrolmen were to be tried for violating the rules and regulations of the department, and calling South Omaha telephone No. 390. each officer had from six to a dozen wit- Harry Guthrie, Twenty-fourth and E nesses on hand.

First on the call came Officers Brennan and Davidson. They were tried for having been caught drinking in a saloon while on duty. It was not a hard matter to prove the truth of the charges. After these officers and the witnesses had been put first and U streets, announce the birth of a through a long course of questioning by son members of the board. Mr. Nolan arose and at considerable length explained his position in these cases. He said that the men had been on the force only a short time, and possibly were not thoroughly conversant with all of the rules. Further, he asserted that the particular rule under which the charges had been brought did not specify any penalty. Therefore he suggested that the men be fined ten days' pay, the fine dating from the date of suspension. Then the officers were given some advice by the board and were restored to Next came Ed Kroeger. Captain Shields reported Kroeger for drinking in a saloen while on duty. Kroeger proved by the bartender of the place and a number of men who were in the saloon at the time that the officer had been called in to stop an altercation going on at one of the card tables. Witnesses went on to say that Kroewas offered a drink of anything he wanted, but declined. He did finally drink a bottle of red pop. As he was leaving the saloon, Kroeger met Captain Shields comthe in the door. Shields could not swear, that he saw Kroeger drinking anything.

When the majority of the board saw that the charges had fallen through, the thought came to Nolan that Kroeger's application had never been formally acted upon by the board. Masson and all the considering the charges. Vansant's protest did not avail, and the vote on the application of this officer was taken, with the result that all the members with the exception of Vansant voted against the application. As by turning down the application Kroeger was no longer a memher of the police force, the charges were not considered.

This ended the trials. Then the board gave Chief Briggs special instructions to impress upon his men the necessity of keeping out of saloons while on duty. Nolan said that when off duty and not in uniform the men could do as they pleased. He stated that even when off duty he would insist that policemen pay for their beer, so as not to be under any obligations to liquor dealers.

After more talk along the same lines to the chief, the board adjourned.

American engineers have long been known to commerce. Through desert wilds and mountain fastnesses they have blazed the way for civilization. The world of sordid fact has long known of their ac complishments and has given its frigid acknowledgment of their deeds. And with his newspaper instinct for "the story" Richard Harding Davis seized on this theme and made an engineer the hero of one of the most fascinating of modern romances. And Augustus Thomas, with the unerring instinct of the true dramatist. has seized on the meat of the Davis story and made out of it a play fully as fascinating as the novel: if anything, more, because it gives in a tabloid form, so to speak, the exciting events the story carries along through several chapters of detail, and this without any vicence to the continuity of the yarn or asking that any gaps be filled by a few yards of explanation from the principals in the play. It is touch and go in the book; it is touch and last night at the Boyd.

It is a play of contrasts, powerful, and therefore dramatic. Clay, the American mining engineer, who has come up from the bottom, is contrasted with Stewart, the English officer, who has come down from the top, until the two meet on the ommon ground of honest manhood. Again is Clay contrasted with King, the man who does things with the man who doesn't Alice Langham, the cold, passionless, ex-perienced girl of the world, is contrusted with her impulsive, warm-hearted, earnest sister, Hope, and the qualities of each make the other shine brighter, each in her own way. So, too, are the pictures in the play set one over against the other, even to the love-making. King and Alice discuss the matter of their engagement with much the same indifference that one might assume in regard to an invitation to tea at a house of a tiresome acquaint ance. King admits that he has considered the probable loss of her father's fortune and languidly says he can't convince himself that it would make any difference; he asks her to join him in a trip to the Clay proposes to Hope under fire, seals her acceptance with a rousing smack on the lips and in a moment is under arrest and sentenced to be shot by a general And when it is all over, instead of a to declare war against the Russians in trip to the Mediterranean, Clay offers his Manchuris. It is a little difficult for one who has not read the book to understand exactly the character of Alice Langham, and yet Miss Tennant did it so well as to all but make clear her aversion to Clay and the reason she accepted King. She almost loved Clay herself until the incident of the breakdown of the engines on the Vesta. When Clay emerged from the engine room, the disabled machinery, her esthetic nature revolted, and she made up her mind that had something to do with her desire to clash with Russia. prevent Hope from getting him, also, Miss Tennant makes the part cold, almost austere, and certainly uninteresting. Against her frigidity of manner is set the impulsive, quick-witted, bright, and warmly sympa thetic nature of Hope, admirably presented by Miss Burg, so that in the end one is giad that Clay didn't get the girl whose picture he had adored for so many years before he met the original, but was comforted by her sister.
