The controversy between The Bee and the World-Herald to secure the declaration and appointment of an official paper has been carried before Judge Dickinson on the petition of the World-Herald for a writ of mandamus to estop the city council from carrying out its avowed purpose of designating The Bee as the official paper of the city, following a hearing in which both sides to this controversy have previously set forth their claims, wherein it was shown council in general committee. Also for the further reason that it is not stated in the petition, nor is it now claimed by counse or the plaintiff, that the members of the city council, in determining that the Evening World-Herald did not have at least 5,000 actual and bona fide subscribers, and was not the correct bidder, acted fradulently nor collusively, or did not act in good faith,

Bee Proves Its Claim.

To further establish the undoubted right of The Bee to its claim of being the lowest bidder, and that it had an actual bons fide city circulation of more than 5,000 subscribers, Mr. Connell pointed to the hearing which had been made before the city council, as required by law, and the resolution which was afterwards adopted by the city council, as the result of its investigation, wherein it was recited that The Bee's claim was found to have been clearly proven and substantiated in every particular and that the claims of the World-Herald had been disproven. The resolution adopted by the city council on September 29, as a result of its investigation in this matter, is here shown;

within the city of Omaha, and that the said Bee Publishing Company, at the time of making sald bid and as shown upon said hearing, possessed all the qualifications required by law, for a bidder of such publishing, and that under said proof and showing the said Bee Publishing Company is entitled to and should receive the contract for doing such publishing in the Omaha Evening Bee, until July, 1904, and that a contract therefor without further delay, should be made and would be now ordered but for the issuance of a temporary injunction so granted by Judge Read is vacated or dissolved. That until the said temporary injunction so granted by Judge Read is vacated or dissolved or until it has been judicially determined that the mayor and countract, that no further action with reference to the designation of an official paper of the city or the making of a contract for such publications be taken.

Beaks Void of True Record.

Books Void of True Record.

In the questions submitted to City Circulator Hemming of the World-Herald by Mr. Connell some interesting facts were developed, one of which was that no true record of the bona fide circulation of the paper could be shown or indicated by the books of the concern. Mr. Hemming testified that the books would show the number of papers delivered to the carriers, but that they would not show the amount of cash which had been paid to the carriers by the actual bona fide subscribers. It also was shown that there was no record made or kept of the receipts from the subscribers, in good faith. and that the books only show the payments in cash made by the carriers for papers which had been furnished them for delivery to subscribers. It was shown that only when required to do so did the carriers submit a list of the subscribers for whom and to whom they were furnishing papers. Once each month it was stated that the carriers ordinarily turned in such a list, but that such lists could not now be produced for the reason that they had been destroyed. It also was shown that some of these names had been placed on file, but this was not always done and for that reason would be impossible to ascertain the actual number of bona fide subscribers to the World-Herald at any given time.

Another important point in this consection was developed when it was stated by Mr. Hemming that wherever the books would indicate the number of subscribers at any given time, the subscribers to the Evening World-Herald could not be differentlated from those to the morning paper, since the receipts for the two papers were always combined, since only a few of the cit of the city of Omaha, after a rigid in routes are independent of the morning

Under the continued questioning of Mr. Connell the admission was made by Mr Hemming that all he actually and person ally knew as to the exact number of subscribers to the World-Herald during 1903 and up to the present is limited to the returns submitted in writing or verbally by the carriers.

World-Herald Ads Void.

In his arguments Mr. Connell said that out two questions are at issue in this con troversy, namely, whether the World-Her ald had 5,000 actual bons fide subscribers, and whether it was the lowest bidder. An important point was scored by Mr. Connell when he argued that since the mayor and council, after continued deliberation, had determined that the World-Herald did not have 3,000 actual bons fide subscribers, that if important publications or advertisements which are required by law should be placed in that paper they would be void. Then it was that Mr. Connell followed this up with the law point that the World-Herald had so right in this hearing before a court of he law to introduce new evidence nor to nake a different showing from what it had made before the city council.

that the council had acted fraudulently, FOR BIGGERAND BETTER CITY collusively or in pursuance of a combina tion or conspiracy, or that it did not act

A suppository case was then cited by Mr. Connell, in which it was assumed that some paper had caused its circulation to jump up wonderfully, after the fashion of the mush room, just before the time designated by

"Would this constitute a legal and bona fide circulation?" It was found by the investigation which was conducted before the city council that certain routes of the World-Herald had been checked up and gone over carefully and that in many places the alleged subscribers were taking the paper under protest; others were taking it for just one day or a week on trial; others were taking It at the personal request of the carrier, while others were taking it for various reasons, but none of which would, under the statutes, constitute a regular, bona fide subscriber.

Finally, it was held that the power to determine the question of circulation and the lowest bidder was vested in the mayor and council, and that the mayor and counvestigation, had declared the World-Herald did not have 5,000 bona fide subscribers.

Gurley Has His Say.

In making the concluding argument for the World-Herald, W. 7. Gurley said that the question as to whether the World-Herald had, or whether it did not have, a circulation of 5,000 was not merely a matter in which the city council or the court could exercise its discretion, but was a matter involving an absolute fact. In this connection Mr. Gurley held that the discretion residing in a board, which a court will not review, is a discretion to finally determine condition, which, whether is exists or not, is a matter of opinion of judgment; but where there is an ultimate fact to be determined-a fact which either does or does not exist-the discretion exercised in arriving at the ultimate fact is subject to review.

"The Commercial club has been the father of all the important propositions which have come up in this city since its organization," said A. Hospe. "Just suppose the tveness in every way. The large meetings club should go out of existence for a while; people would soon begin to remember what the club had done. I am in favor, however, of a meeting of the entire club once a month, business and social, with perhaps a little dinner. It would be a good thing if the members would attend the weekly C meetings of the executive committee and bring up all matters which they think will be of use to the club or city.
