We consider that the news that diplomatic relations were at an end quite equal to a declaration of war, us has been the custom in other conflic.s of nations.

"Much has been said about our violating the laws of war by bombarding the Russian navy before a declaration of war had been made, but let me say that the beginning of the war is a matter of fact and not a matter of ceremony. Jurists who are acquinted with international law say a declaration of war is unnocessary. It is true that if one nation takes another by surprise, while it is in an entirely peaceful mood it may be considered a flagrant infringement of international law, as the Russian minister, Count Cassini, said, but the world knows what Russia had been doing all the time preceding the breaking out of hostilities. The very ships that we sank were used for military purposes and

Probably it will last a year or two, and perhaps longer, but new we must go to the line of battle into the old Russian territory. The eastern coasts of Siberia and Manchuria will be the scenes of operation. It is not oud intention to be aggressive. Only so far as it is necessary to advance for our better defense. Even if we defeat Russia in Manchuria we do not intend to keep it for ourselves. It is not a war of aggrandizement on our part.

Commercial View.

"So much for the practical point of view," centinued the baron. "but there is a viewpoint of commerce. As to that in Corea everyone will recognize that our interests are greater than those of any other country. With regard to Manchuria, we also have large commercial interests in common with those of the United States and other commercial countries. Our interasts are a little larger than those of other countries excepting the United States and Great Britain, but we are quite prepared to participate with them on an squal footing. Viewed from this point it may be said we are not fighting for our swn literests, faerely for the common inerests of civilized countries.
