CAPTAIN IRROFF IS FOUND GUILTY.

Twenty-Five Years of Penal Servitude for Selling Information. PETERSBURG, March 25 .- Captain Irkoff of the Manchurian commissariat who was arrested on a charge of selling information in connection with the quartermaster's department to Lieutenant Colonel Akashi, formerly military attache of the Japanese legation at St. Petersburg, has been tried by court-martial and found guilty. He has been sentenced to twenty-five years penal servitude.

It transpires that Captain Irkoff had the most friendly relations with Mr. Kurino, formerly Japanese minister to Russia, and with other members of the Japanese legation, where the negotiations for the sale of the information by the captain were negotiated.

Altvater Not Banished.

ST. PETERSHURG, March 25 .- A report circulated to the effect that General Altvater, assistant chief of ordnance to the Grand Duke Michael, had been banished to a small and remote military post in the Caucusus is not true, but it is true that the czar is dissatisfied with some of the conditions existing in the ordnance department and that General Altvater has been given a commission to inspect certain fortresses. The general is now in Sebastopol, and his work at St. Petersburg has been turned over to the Grand Duke Sergius Michaelovich

According to the best information obtainable, Viceroy Alexieff requested a supply of quick-firing guns in January, but the request was not promptly filled, owing to General Altvater's remissness.

STRUGGLE IN THE FAR EAST

LAWLESS AGGRESSION AND FREEDOM

Name We Give to Empire Grabbing Depends on Where it Occurs and Who Makes It.

PHILADELPHIA, March 25 .- "The Struggle in the Far East, Its Causes and the Issues involved" was the subject under discussion tonight at the monthly meeting of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, held in the New Century drawing room. The principal address was made by William Dudley Foulke of Washington, United States civil service commissioner. Tindley Miller Keasbey of Bryn Mawr college, Charles Emory Smith, who was United States minister to Russia during President Harrison's administration and Brigadier General James H. Wilson, U. S. A., also discussed the subject. There was a large audience present. President Edmund J. James of Northwestern university presided and made a short address before introducing Mr. Foulke.

Interests of America in the War. William Dudley Foulke of Washington was the next speaker. The title of Mr. Foulke's paper was, "The Causes of the War in the Far East and the Issues Involved. He first traced the diplomatic and milltary events which led to the present war, and then considered the issues involved in the struggle, especially with reference to the future fate of the Chinese empire. That empire might remain independent, it might fall under the leadership or control of Japan, it might be divided among the great powers or it might fall under the dominion of Russia. These are the a ternatives. How will they affect our commercial interests? So long as Chinese territory remains intact, either independent or under the control of a nation whose policy it is to encourage free competition, America is in a better position than any European power. We can produce most articles cheaper than elsewhere, and since our route to China by sea is far shorter we can transport these things more cheaply than any European country. In the natural course of trade if we show bulk of Chinese foreign commerce. When China awakens Its trade is bound to be immense. It will hardly have any limits, except the restrictions imposed by the government which might control Chinese ter-

The predominance of Japan in China will interfere with the growth of our commerce less than the predominance of any other power. Japan is an island empire, a commercial power, friendly to the "open door" from motives of interest, while France, Germany and Russia, all devoted to the protective policy, will exploit their own possessions in China for the benefit of their own people to the exclusion of our Russia is most exclusive of all. as it produces all the raw materials necessary for its commercial independence, although it cannot manufacture on equal terms with England or America: therefore t must protect itself by high tariffs, which it has done in European Russia and will do in China. Its promises to respect the "open door" cannot be relied upon, but even if they could they would not prevent Russia from shutting out American commerce in the interior of the country by discriminating rates upon its railway.

Political Questions Involved. But Mr. Foulke contended that even our with Russia's aspirations for supremacy in the Chinese empire.

He reviewed the past history of Russia, its suppression of all liberal institutions, the stiffing of liberal education, the censorship of the press, the tyranny of administrative exile. He contended that to all nations that take thought for the future of humanity the duty is imperative to stay the aggression of the colossal empire, conquest threatens a lasting calamity to the essentials of modern civilization.

He considered it fortunate that a new power, like Japan, should have come to the front, possessing the advantages of a geographical situation, an admirable equipment and a spirit of determination which might enable it to stay, at least for a time, the progress of the Russian advance. He believed that even if Japan should succeed in reorganizing the vast population of China, under its new leadership, the "yellow peril" which some fear that this might nvolve, is far less dangerous than its alternative, the "Muscovite peril," against which it furnished the best and surest protection.

Keasbey Argues for Russia. The present war in the east also furnished the text for an address by Prof. Lindley Miller Keasbey of Bryn Mawr, Pa., who said:

The sympathy of the American people seems to be with the Japanese in the present struggle. I say "seems" advisedly, for we have not yet been and shall not be, put to the test when real sympathy counts. So far as it has gone, it is only another instance of the under dog, who, we know, had his bone taken away from him and is now fighting to get it back—another example of David challenging Goliath. In the broader sense besides the marvelous development of the Japanese, from island isolation to world competition, all within one generation, as it were. Then, too, the personal character of the Japanese appeals to us—to our intelligence, however, or our curiosity if you will, rather than to our hearts. In the first place he is plucky, or "sandy," we would say, this is an asset of initial importance in our eyes; he is vivacious and at the same time sober; he is patient and no long suffering; his stature is small, but his capacity is big; he is artistic, but not effeminite, and so on—in a word, the Japanese appear to combine in their miniature personality virtues to our minds the most opposed; we wonder because we do not understand and withal we admire, what though we cannot sympathize, since real sympathy, fellow feeling in the deeper sense, runs not across racial lines. As for the "brotherhood of man" It is a mere decorative phrase. Kipling came nearer to it when he said: "East is east and west is west, and never the twain shall meet."

Whatever may be said about the Russian, however the Muscorite meet. nearer to it when he said: "East is east and west is west, and never the twain shall meet."

Whatever may be said about the Russian, however the Muscovite may be maligned, he is after all a white man, and this means much in the matter of sympathy. Then, too, we should bear in mind most of our knowledge of Russia comes through British channels, tainted with English, or shall I say Anglo-Saxon, antipathles? We rail against Russian despotism as if, forsooth we ourselves were free! Indeed, for out and our tyranny I think I could show some political bosses who could outpoint the exar of all the Russians in the game. But what about the massacres of the Jews? Oh, as for that, if they were not better trained than we, the Russians might well enough retort. "What about the lynchings of the negroes?" Not that the "tu quoqus" extenuates either orime, but "people who live in glass houses, you know. Russia has not been written up as Japan has and what has been written is mostly superficial and largely distorted.

Russia Should Be Studied.

Russin Should Be Studied.

Russia Should Be Studied.

To understand what Russia has made of herself and her country during the last century one should go through the volumes prepared for the Paris exposition, or at least read Krauss or Henry Norman's articles. To comprehend the Russian interature. Surely Tolstoi and Turgenoff give true pictures that are not to be despised. But it is not my purpose to put up an apology for Russia; as the world goes Russia needs no apology. If we could only shake off this incubus of Angle-Saxon hypocrisy, we should see the situation in its true light, and realize that admiration for the Japanese need not mean malignment of the Russians. They are a big patient, long suffering people, lacking agility and ingenuity, if you will, but industrious withal.

may be permitted to point out a political parallel and refer to an historical unction. Russia and the United States have each ad virgin continents to exploit, by fur rading, mining and farming; by railroad uniding, city construction and all the rest. building, city construction and all the rest. Success has attended both in their efforts and both as a result have come out on the Pacific. This of itself should constitute a bond of sympathy between the two people. Besides, each nation has aided the other in her work. Our path was opposed by the British, who paralleled our course to the Pacific, and Russia lent us timely aid on two occasions; by putting her fleet at our disposal during the civil war, and by the cession of Alaska shortly afterwards. So far the assistance we have rendered Bussia in her advance across Siberia has been in the way of advice and the requisite instruments, both of which were well paid for. Now, the time has come when Russia a outlet on the Pacific is opposed by England's ally, Japan. The inference is obvious, should we not in common gratitude express our sympathy with an old friend, and at least lend her our moral support? The government should remain neutral, I grant, but the people need not withhold their sympathy and show ingratitude on that account.

"Yeilow Peril" is Imminent.

"Yellow Peril" is Imminent,

"Yellow Peril" is Imminent.

The historical function I had in mind to refer to is that of maintaining the white man's rule, "bearing the white man's rule, "bearing the white man's burden," to bofrow kipling's phrase, but it is more than that, for when it comes to the point it will be a question of racial supremacy. So far as the yellow race is concerned, we Americans met the matter simply enough by our policy of exclusion; with regard to the black race, the problem is far more difficult. In Europe it was different. There the rise and spread of white man's civilization was conditioned from the start by the exclusion of the Mongolian. In a large measure, I might say almost entirely, the task of exclusion has fallen to Russia's share. It was Russia who finally drove back the Tartar hordes, Russia it is who has kept the Turk at buy. This is something for civilization, is it not: Russia acted in her own interests, you will say. Very true, but the rest of Europe reaped as much advantage as she did. And what has been Russia's reward? Some of our continental states stand by her, to be sure, but what shall we say to England's policy, practically allying herself with the unspeakable Turk and robbing Russia of the full fruits of her hard carned victory. The history of the near east is repeating itself in the far east today, where England is once more allied with the Mongolian. The Japanese are not to be compared to the Turks, of course, except in this, that they are also of the yellow race. The 'yellow peril' may not be immediate, but it is there in the background of this conflict, and if China joins forces with Japan I for my part fancy it will become most immediate for all white men concerned. Hence, however much we may admire the Japanese, and even though we no longer cherish friendship for the part each of the characteries with Japan enter the Japanese, and even though we no longer cherish friendship for the part each of the characteries in the pare each though we no longer cherish friendship for the part each of the immediate for all white men concerned. Hence, however much we may admire the Japanese, and even though we no longer cherish friendship for the Russians, still 1 believe in our own interests, in the interests of white man's civilization, we should take the yellow peril into account and pause a bit before we range ourselves even sentimentally on the side of Japan. This action of the judge presents at least an entirely new feature in American justice. A suitor is denied the right to offer evidence in support of his case because that judge had made up his mind in advance that the witnesses offered are hot worthy of belief. To refuse to hear these witnesses was an unwarranted and unheard of proceeding. To continue the case of Hossians without delay under the circumstances was an unparameled abuse of discretion on the part of the judge which amounted to a denial of justice.
