Grover Cleveland Discusses Recent Political Novels, but Not as a Critic.

BUCHANAN'S STORY OF A LABOR AGITATOR

Writes of Things He Knows by Actual Contact and Personal Experience—"The Story of Destiny," a Popular Book.

Grover Cleveland is not in the habit of posing before the public as a literary critic. But when he does talk about books he manages to be as interesting as he is on other subjects.

"That book interested me greatly," said the ex-president, "because it deals with matters which persons acquainted with politics know about."

George H. Gordon, widely known through the west during the last ten years as an authority on the labor question, has written the Outlook company, the publishers of Joseph R. Buchanan's book, "The Story of the Labor Agitator," as follows:

Two days after publication Mrs. Clarence Mackay's unusual and striking book, "The Stone of Destiny," by Harpers, was ordered into its second edition.

"Yarborough, the Premier," by Agnes Russell Weekes, is the tale of an English politician whose unscrupulous and scheming ways bring him great power and lay upon him interests of growing importance.

"The Fugitive" is a narrative-romance, which begins among the peasantry in the heart of Lithuania, Russia, where the quiet ceremonial orthodox life is persecuted.

"The Book of Herbs" by Lady Rosalind Northcote is the twelfth volume of "Handbooks of Practical Gardening," and the discussion of these herbs—the names of many of which are familiar to us by name.

"The First Years of the Life of the Redeemed After Death," a new unfolding in theology and in the Christian life and destiny here and hereafter with some connected inquiries—by William Clarke Ellett.

"Impertinent Poems" is the title of a little volume by Edmund Vance Cook, who is also the author of "A Patch of Paradise."

"Witch Lights" is the significant title of a very pleasing collection of poems from the pen of Ed. E. Sheagreen.
