MACHINE MADE SOLES IN FAVOR Rise and Progress of a Modern Specialty in the Supplies

"It was not so very many years ago," said a dealer in show supplies, "that you leather, standing over in one corner, the stock from which he cut his supply of seles. as he needed them, in requiring shoes. But now from many thousands of such shops this once familiar feature has disappeared Instead, the cobbler buys soles already cut

"Cut soles are made in a great variety of sizes and shapes. The cobbler can now buy out soles and get exactly what he wants for less than he can buy the leather and cut them out himself.

"About 50 per cent of the cobblers of New Fork and this part of the country now buy cut poles; in the wouth new about 25 per cent buy them; in the west about 75 per cent of the cobblers buy them. They are apparently more progressive there than the people of the east. "This is accounted for, I suppose, by the fact that there are more new communities there, and towns starting new are likely to start with everything modern. If you were going to tostall a new plant of any sort you would put in the very latest styles of machinery, while in older communities they cling more to old ways. "And in the west, too, cut soles are sold to people who mend their own shoes. Taking them altogether, in all parts of the country, there are many thousands who do this.

"There are plenty of people living scattered about the land who would have to go twenty-five, fifty, seventy-five miles to get to a cobbler, and this wouldn't pay. Or they may mend their own shoes for economy's anke. 'In old times the farmer or other head of a family who did this work had for it an improvised set of mois. But in these days he buys a household kit of cobblers' tools, "In no trade has there been a greater advance than in that of shoe manufacturing. And no trade has been more highly specialized. For example, there are concerns that make nothing but shoe counters, and other espablishments that turn out nothing but bot and shoe heels; and there is one big western opposern that makes nothing but kits of cubblers' tools, turning out of household kits and other sorts a carload a day. "A good many kits of crbblers' tools? Yes, a lot, I know, but this is a big country with lots of people in it, and there are other lands to supply. "Well, the farmer or other man who

mends his own shoes buys in these days

In World's Work for March, under the title of "What Has Followed the Coal Strike," Guy Warfield tells the inside story of an industrial condition affecting the whole country. To pursue the first-hand investigation he lived with the miners and worked in the mines as a nonunion man. He sums up the financial results of the

"The coal that would have been mined if no strike had occurred was, according to the anthracite coal strike commission, about E,000,000 tons. Thus the miners forfeited about $25,000,000 in wages. This same commission awarded the miners, when they settled the strike, a wage increase has been disclosed since the arrival in which, including the sliding scale, is esti-Quincy, Iil., a few days ago of Charles Du | mated at its highest to be 18 per cent. Since the settlement of the Du Bois went to Louisiana several years strike the coal companies have produced something in excess of $75,000,000 more than would have been received by the operators at the prices prevailing before the strike. Arbitration or no arbitration, the operator has realized that a strike enriches him. The public pays the cost of the strike in win; the public lose. And the miners are tired of arbitration, are remive but find the nine-hour day longer than the ten-hour
