Tonight the recently elected city council will meet in its first regular session. Mayor Koutsky will occupy the chair. On the night following the announcement of the official canvass the council met, organized by selecting a president and appointing committees.

At tonight's meeting it is not expected much business will be transacted. embers will endeavor to learn the mutine or the work and will then be prepared to go ahead and do business as if nothing had happened to change the political complexion of the council. For two years the council has been four democrats to two republicans, but a reverse order was given the people at the ballot box April 5; and the council now stands four republican members and two democrats. Captain Shields said last night he had notified the proprietors of this place a number of times to close promptly but they disregarded his orders.

Boys Disturb Worship.

Two religious meetings were disturbed last night, one at Castellar Street church and the Salvation Army meeting at Sixteenth and Douglas streets. At Castellar Street church have been greatly annoyed of late by the actions of a number of boys who are said to make it a practice of shouting and scampering about just as the services commence. Last night Charles A. Yost, who was attending the church, chased the boys and managed to catch one, James Mariin, of 1919 South Eighteenth street, and held him till the patrol wagon arrived.

and is recounted just to give an idea of the terms of the federal courts at Grand infectious nature of the entertainment afforded by the Rogers brothers, Gus and Max, and the big company that is behind surgeons applied the plaster them. The Rogers brothers have been to Hackensack and Harvard, even to London in politics and out of it, but this is the first time they have ever been in Omaha, and the assemblage that said "Welcome, little stranger!" to them at the Boyd last night was not overly large, but was the most warmly demonstrative that has been seen there in a long time. An attempt to describe "The Rogers Brothers in London" would entail a narrative of all that took place on the stage last night. It is a medley of light music, mostly of the "ragtime" order, the cracking of new and witty jests, the singing of new songs and the exhibition of many pretty arrangements of beautiful costumes and fresh young faces in a series of stage pictures all einborately intricate in design and as pleasing in of fect as one could wish. It is bright and clean and funny from first to last. The overture brought applause, and the finale an outburst of approval, and between them every possible evidence of pleasure and enjoyment was indulged in by the people The whistling episode was spontaneous, and had its ludicrous side, for at one time the boys in the gallery and the men in the parquet were whistling and the girls on the stage were laughing.

Both the Rogers are funny; both sing well, and both dance well, and neithe takes into account the dialect in making a point. They are natural and spontaneous numorists, and after seeing them one can easily comprehend their immense vogue where they are known. And they have a proper conception of their importance to the success of the piece, and work as hard as anyone in the company to make the "show go." Miss Reynolds and Mr. Moore have a duet with chorus, "On a Startight Night," that is quite effective. The Rogers brothers and Miss Aymar sing "Queen of the Bungalow" so that a dozen recalls are won, and their final song, "Say You'll Be a Friend of has a wooden-shoed chorus of midgets that literally came near bringing down the house. The rhythmical beat of those solid soles, merrily swung by the hustling little girls who wear them, is something terrific. The whole piece fairly bristles with good things; it has a most lavish setting, and is staged with a care rarely bestowed on a musical comedy, and deserves a place at the very top among the list of pieces worth

The Good Old Summer Time" at the

"The Good Old Summer Time," which opened at the Krug to two packed houses yesterday, is as warm and cheerful as its name implies. No more enjoyable enterainment has been offered at this popular theater since its opening, not even excepting the Ward and Vokes and Nat Wills organizations, which made such emphatic hits. In one particular, indeed, "The Good Old Summer Time" surpasses both "A Son of Rest" and "A Pair of Pinks," and that is in swinging, catchy music. There is scarcely a musical number in this new production that you don't feel impelled to hum or whistle as you walk out of the theater. In a week everybody in Omaha with a "musical ear" will be whistling The Sweetest Flower That Grows in Ten-"Sunday Morning When the Church Bells Ring," "In the Sweet Spring Time," "Himbo" and perhaps one or two other of the song hits in this show. The songs are all given with a large chorus of handsomely gowned show girls, who sing as well as they look, which is high praise to their voices.

George Evans, known here as a clever vandeville artist, is the star of "The Good Old Summer Time." He is the man who actounds and pleases by the wide variety of tones he utters in talking and singing. and in his new piece he lucks no oppor tunity to display his talent to the fullest. In the fun making he is ably assisted by John Conrey, Charles M. McDonald and Goff Phillips. Annie Martell puts a great deal of dash into the performance and leads several of the song numbers correctly. Durothy LaMar, another of the principals in the cast, is charming in more ways than one, and Pearl Revare and Marie Hiland must also be mentioned for their clever work. But, after all, the success of "The Good Old Summer Time" must be credited in large measure to the musical man who selected the voices and the "good eye" that was evidently cooperating to get nothing but pretty girls in the busch. The place is staged elaborately, the scattle embellishment being greater than is usual with musical com-"The Good Old Stummer Time" continoss at the Krug until after Wednesday
