BATTLE ROYAL WITH MONEY

Various Moves to Place New Jersey in Corporation Plumes.

STATE TAXES OPULENT ON BIG FEES

Homeless Trusts Harbored There for the Money in Getting—Sample Instance of Fighting Rich Quick.

In a battle royal with the great combinations of capital Congressman Allan L. McDermott is the victor. It takes the first substantial stand in the national legislature to place the vast corporations of the country under the direct supervision of the federal government. This is but the beginning of a fight that may reach into every state in the union should the congressman be the victor. But the particular state that is most affected by the measure now pending in New Jersey, the so-called "home of the trusts." This warfare that McDermott has begun against one of the recognized industries of his own state is all the more accentuated by the fact that he was the first president of the Corporation Trust company of New Jersey, an organization which houses and fosters 80 per cent of the huge financial combinations of the United States and which, it has been charged in court, furnishes "dummy" boards of boy directors at a moment's notice in any number that may be desired. McDermott's war on the "home of the trusts," however, is not the only hostile demonstration that has been begun against this far-reaching institution. In the state legislature at Albany a series of bills have been introduced which attack the officers, and the bankers of the great New Jersey corporations an endless amount of worry.

Like the building of Rome, it took more than a day to make New Jersey the banner incorporation state. The good people of that commonwealth have been fighting the problem long before 1884, when a law was passed bringing the thing about. It was so contrived that since that year the citizens of that state have paid no state taxes. The assessment of the corporations is one-tenth of 1 per cent on all amounts of issued capital stock up to $5,000,000, one-twentieth of 1 per cent up to $10,000,000, and $50 a million after that. In addition to the tax there is a filing fee at the time of each corporation amounting to 20 cents for each $1,000 of the total capital stock authorized, but in no case is less than $25 taken. Thus, when J. Pierpont Morgan incorporated the monster steel trust, with a capital of $1,000,000, he handed over to the state treasurer of New Jersey a check for $20,000. The next largest fee was $80,000, paid by the Northern Securities company on a capitalization of $400,000,000. While these big corporations are the largest, there are thousands of others that have filed certificates of incorporation at the secretary of state's office in Trenton. The big year was in 1901, when 2,347 corporations began their existence in the state of New Jersey. Before them, however, the state did, and has since done, a very comfortable business. The annual report of the state treasurer of New Jersey for the fiscal year ending October 31, 1902, shows that $59,273,25 in fees were collected from new corporations. In 1901, 1,989 certificates of incorporation were filed. This sum, however, did not include the state taxes collected from the miscellaneous corporations which that year amounted to $1,983,208.57, making the total receipts from the corporations for 1902 $2,576,481.72. It is considered that the total receipts of the state that year amounted to $4,377,846.00, of which amount the corporations paid more than half, it must be admitted that New Jersey is not so slow.

TRADES AND PROFESSIONS

Comparative Merits of Both Considered from a Financial Standpoint.

INCOME OF TRADESMEN AVERAGE HIGH

The Money Side of Professional Life Not as Alluring as Supposed—Cream for the Few, Crumbs for the Many.

Public opinion in general in its ideas of the average income of the minister, the lawyer, the teacher and those of similar callings is all wrong, or nearly so. Contrary to popular belief, the average mechanic or skilled workman in many cases is better paid than a considerable proportion of professional men. While much mystery surrounds the incomes of the leading professions, still it is possible to obtain actual figures which may be accepted as authoritative.

Although it is true that in every profession a few names will occur at once which are associated with enormous salaries or fees, it is beyond question that the great majority of professional men, even after years of costly and careful preparation, are wretchedly underpaid. In gathering statistics in reference to this recompense, the incompetents have been passed by and only those who have been practicing for years and who may be said to have established reputations and practices in their communities have been taken into consideration.

Few Doctors Accumulate Wealth. The rewards of the medical profession probably vary to a greater degree than those of any other, but the average physician in the larger cities is commonly paid a moderately wealthy, while few of them are actually poor. Yet, as a matter of fact, they rarely have much property at the time of their death, and a considerable portion are actually buried at the expense of their friends. Stories of enormous fees paid by wealthy patients are, of course, familiar, for taken as a class, the American millionaires are the most liberal patients in the world with their physicians. All the doctors in the United States who earn professionally more than $100,000 annually could probably be counted on the fingers, however, and it is likewise probable that not more than the digits of one hand would be necessary to enumerate those in Chicago who earn more than $50,000 per year. Perhaps a score take in one-half the latter amount and upwards of one hundred enjoy incomes of more than $20,000.

These figures, however, refer to men who are obviously at the head of their profession. The average income of a Chicago physician is far under these figures. From statistics gathered recently, a prominent physician gives it as his opinion that the average income is not in excess of $2,000 a year. There are many, of course, who collect much less so that the figure is, if anything, a liberal average.

Clergy Aided by Perquisites. Clergymen are even less liberally remembered in the matter of monetary compensation than are the physicians. It is supposed difficult, too, to strike an average.

UNFAILING SIGN OF DANGER

Women with Red Petticoats Toss a Bush of Worry to Train Operatives.

Unto all railroad engineers the red petticoat is a sacred thing. Upon scores of occasions red petticoats have been the means of saving trains from being wrecked. Invariably the woman who discovers a wash-out or a collapsed bridge or an obstruction on the track wears a red petticoat. There may be a psychological explanation of this remarkable fact, but whether there is or not, the brave woman always manages during the one minute and twenty-seven seconds that must elapse before the arrival of the lightning express to get her red petticoat off and wave it frantically, thus warning the engineer and enabling him to stop the train on the very brink of destruction.

To all railroad men red is a sign of danger. Perhaps this is because what might have been the first railroad disaster was prevented by the waving of a red petticoat. Now it is unfortunate that red petticoats have been causing trouble for railroad men at Wilmington, Del. Italian women have been in the habit of picking up coal along the tracks in that city, and because the March winds toyed with their skirts, it has frequently happened that engineers on through express trains, seeing what they supposed to be danger signals, have thrown on their brakes, thereby flinging passengers into ignominious heaps and causing wild panics in the cars. The result has been an order strictly prohibiting women who wear red petticoats from picking coal along the tracks of the Pennsylvania railroad. This order will undoubtedly work many hardships, but there seems to be no help for the Italian ladies of Wilmington. The red petticoats standing as a danger signal must not be impaired.—Chicago Record-Herald.

DANISH CARNegie IN CHICAGO

Dr. Carl Jacobsen Tells of the Duty Rich Men Owe to Their Country.

Dr. Carl Jacobsen of Copenhagen, who is in Chicago, has been called the Carnegie of Denmark. He has given away 18,000,000 crowns, or almost $5,000,000 and he proposes to give more. He has been an interesting life, and he has an interesting theory of what a rich man owes to his country. He spoke of both last night at his hotel.

"My father, Jacob Carl Jacobsen, was not born a rich man," said he, "but he became one by industry. He was immensely interested in art, and in the sixties gave money to art. The New Carlsberg institution in Washington. His first brewery was established in 1847 and his second in 1864.

"They were erected at Carlsberg, near Copenhagen, and he named the town after me. He gave these breweries for the support of art. He was interested in the management of the breweries.

"In 1876 I founded a third brewery, which I called the New Carlsberg, and which in 1890 I gave, on similar conditions, to found a new institution, called the New Carlsberg, devoted to art. The New Carlsberg contains the most costly and precious collection of ancient sculpture in the world, which I brought from the Villa Borghese when Prince Borghese was in money difficulties. The casts in the institute are the best in the world, and I spent a year in traveling to get them, as well as 1,000,000 crowns.

"I have also given over 1,000,000 crowns for an industrial art school in Copenhagen and the government gave as much. When I made over the New Carlsberg brewery I stipulated that if ever the profits reached above a certain figure I was to receive a third of them, but I put the limit so high that it will never be reached. I retain a private fortune left me by my father, and, of course, I receive a salary for the management of the breweries."

When asked as to what he thought of the Carnegie theory that to die rich was to die disgraced, Dr. Jacobsen answered that he believed it was true.

"The duty of a rich man," he said, "is to his country. He should see what his country lacks and then attempt to supply the deficiency with his money. I saw that what Denmark wanted was art and I proceeded to furnish art. My father was a famous collector and an art critic. I have inherited his tastes, and I have given to Denmark a great art collection and a school of instruction."

Dr. Jacobsen is 62 years of age, hale and hearty, with a beard like a Viking. What he is proudest of, however, is not his benefactions, but of his relations with his workmen.

"My workmen love me," he said with emotion, "and I am a father to them. They are paid the highest wages in the country, and a service of ten years entitles them to a pension. Part of the profits of the breweries is spent in providing them model cottages. I have over 2,000 workmen. When I have money I have our annual outing my family and I go with them, game their games and their pleasures. My sons join in the sports and my daughters dance with them all.

"Five of my children have died, and at their death my workmen shared my grief. I think I have solved the labor question, at least for myself."

Dr. Jacobsen has come to America to see his two sons, Vagu and Helge, who are students in a school of termentology in South Water street.

"I am bringing the boys up to be practical brewers," he said. "One man in a crowd can have something of any other man in the same craft. America is the most progressive country in the world, and while we know as much about brewing as you do, I want my sons to know what you know."—Chicago Chronicle.

CHANGING OF THE SEXES

Courage and Fighting Spirit Shows Where Formerly Screams and Pleading Prevailed.

When Miss Sarah Biddle of Philadelphia (of course she is a prominent society woman) was attacked the other afternoon by a negro (of course he was hairy), she neither screamed nor fainted, indeed, when she felt the tug on her purse, she attacked her assailant with an umbrella and drove him up the street yelling like the piper's son.

In Brooklyn last week at a fire, it was a woman who went back through the heat and smoke for the rescue of an old man left behind, and bore him out on her shoulders. In a suburb, when two sisters—a big one and a little one—discovered a burglar under the eaves they did not run, but pulled him out. The fat sister kept a 25-pound pressure on the burglar's chest, while the other, more fleet of foot, brought the policeman. At a Jersey City fire last week a 7-year-old girl was the means of saving the lives of her parents and her baby brother. Ten days ago a 15-year-old Brooklyn girl repelled two bank robbers and did not lose so much as a hairpin in the affray, and was so cool after it that she did not even talk fast.

When we contrast such conduct with that of the man who recently fainted in court, or with that of the man who testified that he always walked after nightfall in the middle of the street, it is not strange questions are asked as to what has become of the traditional feminine timidity. Is the woman who faints at every opportunity becoming extinct? Is the time arriving when it will be the masculine trait to be hysterical and helpless when danger appears in the offing? Are feminine annals hereafter to be made up not of cases of patient suffering, as in the past—but of active heroism—New York Globe.
