"The Sturdy Oak" of Former Times Changing Places with the "Dopendent Vine"-What We

Are Coming To.

Where is mere man likely to find himself fifty or 100 years hence, if the American woman continues to compete with him in the professions and industries? This question came up the other day apropos of English chancellor and some learned judges not to admit women to the English bar. Woman is not handloapped like that over

As much as tweny years ago women in America began to study law, and today swomen are admitted not only to the legal profession, but also to almost every other calling man follows. One by one woman has shoved aside or has taken down the hars which shut her out of colleges, clinics and caucuses, once held sacred to man. An American motto, as was pointed out not long ago by a visiting German, has point, that the women bent on a business or a professional eareer continue to advance in tremendously, large numbers. How many of these are breadwinners or engaged in money making or glory achieving careers is not known, but at the lowest calculation the number of those who strike out for themselves and show no inclination whatever to do the clinging vine act is formidably large. And that is not all. This number, big as
