Scores People Who Put Money Above Morality and Sees Danger to Influence. (From a Staff Correspondent.) LINCOLN, June 9 .- (Special Telegram.) -Henry Watterson faced a crowded auditorium when he delivered the commence-nent oration this morning before the State university graduating class. The address followed the commencement procession, which was impressive beyond precedent. It was led by Chancellor Andrews in his respiendent robe of office and was partly composed of the nearly 250 graduates.

"Conduct of Life" was the theme of Mr. Watterson's oration. It was discussed in masterful discourse that thrilled the large audience into repeated outbursts. His remarks related largely to the dangers that nenace the republic. Credit and character, the blessed heritage of its manhood and womanhood, are the only gold mines that conserve its life's success. Deprecating the growth of the spirit of accumulation, the mania for money-getting, he declared that the real success in securing happiness is obedience to the golden rule, wherein lies the whole secret of human happiness.

ination I

Incidentally the speaker soundly excorinted the "400" for the growing ostentation of wealth. The money standard is held so high and the moral standard so low that nany people think there is no hope, but, as an optimist, he deemed the nation on the ascendency rather than on the decline. He deprecated in strong terms the fact that takes a million dollars to put up a presidential ticket and that a seat in the United States senate costs $100,000. This idea of political ethics must be abandoned else the time must come when the presidential chair will be put up at auction to
