STRICTURE OF THE URETHRA

whether chronic, acute or spannedic, primarily induced as a result of neglected or improperly treated Gonorrhase or other causes, obstructing the phasage and impeding the flow of water, and in time closing the urethral canal entirely, producing a frightful tension of the nervous system, will soon involve in its destructive course the whole gento-urinary system.

Stricture produces a burning or scalding sensation when voiding urine, obstructing its flow, or a parsiatent majous, discharge, sausing britation and pain or prestatic complications. When a man sees that his stream is becoming slowly but surely smaller, that it is twisted, divided and irregular, that, it passes with less force than formerly, that he urinates more frequently than he should that sometimes he must get up in the night to relieve hisself, and that at times his suffering is intanse from the scalding, burning and bearing-down sensations, and that he has a gleety discharge that drains his system constantly, thus weakening both his sexual and general system, then, we say, it is high time that he should do something. Sooner or later, in every case, the urethra, the bladder, the prostate gland and even the kinneys become discased, and if matters are allowed to take their own conrect the whole genitourinary system becomes discreanized and the general health is wheeked. Any sufferer should not let this disease rup on and on, only to become warse as time progresses. These troubles are dangerous and treanherous, not only in theinselves, but in the complications that ensue because these changes are constantly taking place and are hardly perceptible, hence nitract little or no attention, but mener or later the sufferer will awaken to she fact that he is in a scrime shape, and that he has committed a great error, in allowing this trouble to handleously progress and tennelously fasten likely upon the species. He was the become shape and that he are committed a great error in allowing this includes. carheler.
